SEY SEKS TO CUT MEDICAID EXPENSES

Would Drop Private-Nurse Care and Make Client Share Other Costs

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

As part of his effort to cut $200 million from New York State's $3.4 billion Medicaid bill, Governor Carey has proposed to end Medicaid reimbursement for private-duty nursing care and to require Medicaid recipients to pay part of the cost of care, eyeglasses and prescriptions.

Mr. Carey is also considering a cut in the allowable rent paid by Medicaid recipients. Philip L. Toia, said yesterday that the state imposed a 15 percent rent ceiling for welfare recipients. Mr. Toia said, the ceilings "become the floors, with tenants while charging are not on welfare perhaps for identical apartments. Proposal Defeated

Parts are part of a budget-cut on which Mr. Toia has spent effort public officials, social workers and other interested in the administration's effort. In an interview here, is to put the welfare cuts on those who afford them while avoiding more drastic step of cutting Medicaid reimbursement for private-duty nursing care and podiatrists. Study on Korean Influence Buying Is Turning to Possible Prosecution

By ANTHONY MARRO

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—Justice Department investigators concluded at a meeting this week that their inquiry into alleged influence buying by the South Korean Government had reached the point where they should end their "vacuum cleaner-type" gathering of information and begin focusing on possible prosecutions, according to sources close to the case.

The sources cautioned that the investigation was far from complete and that it was not yet certain that indictments would result. But they said that valuable information had been obtained since they began interviewing Kim Sang Keun, the South Korean Embassy official who defected three weeks ago. They said that the coming weeks would be spent trying to corroborate his testimony and trying

Blumenthal Seeks Business Backing

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—W. Michael Blumenthal, the Secretary of the Treasury-designate, hopes to win the backing of the business community for the economic programs of the Jimmy Carter Administration, partly by advocating policies that business approves and also by explaining to businessmen why the new Administration may feel forced to do some things that many of them will not like.

With this objective in mind, Mr. Blumenthal has already begun telephoning businessmen and bankers to explain his views and to get their, and he expects to hold meetings with a wide cross-

CARTER SAYS ACTIONS WON'T BE INFLUENCED BY SAUDI OIL PRICING

He Lauds Decision to Hold Down Increase but Warns It Cannot Affect U.S. in Negotiations

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—President-elect Jimmy Carter said today that he would not let Saudi Arabia's decision to hold down oil prices influence his administration's policies on the Middle East and other matters.

At a news conference at Plains, Ga., Mr. Carter again praised the Saudis for limiting their price rise to 5 percent instead of the 15 percent of other oil-producing states. But he seemed to reject the Saudi effort—made clear yesterday—to link this restraint with the need for the United States to show progress in the Arab-Israeli negotiations and in the North-South economic conference.

In Baghdad, the Iraqi Oil Minister hinted after his return from the meeting of oil exporters in Qatar that his country would back a campaign of propaganda and sedition against Saudi Arabia, which he accused of acting in "the service of imperialism and Zionism." Page 7.]

Envoys Explain Position

Yesterday, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil chief, said that in return for his Government's oil decisions at the Qatar meeting of oil producers, "we expect the West to appreciate what we did and especially the United States."

This was expanded upon by Ali A. Alireza, the Saudi Ambassador to Washington, who said in a statement:

"The one point which should be made just as strongly as the economic aspect is the positive need for all parties to get on now with achieving a just and durable settlement in the Middle East. That is the greatest achievable opportunity on the shared horizon of all of us in the period immediately ahead."

These statements were interpreted in Washington as a Saudi move to persuade the United States to obtain concessions from Israel whenever the next round of negotiations occurs.

U.S. Effort Sought

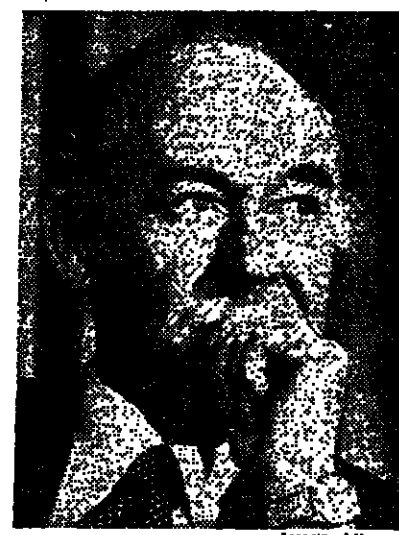

The Saudis have indicated that they would take the lead in promoting moderation on the Arab side.

This would seem to mean that the Saudis want the United States to persuade Israel to give up all the territory it still occupies from the 1967 war and to permit creation of a Palestinian state on its borders. In return, the Arabs would respect Israel's right to exist. The Israelis have previously rejected proposals to give up all land and to allow a Palestinian state. Mr. Carter said at his news conference

COMMISSION FAVORS NEW PANAMA TREATY

Carter Urged to Take Added Steps on Ties to Latin America

By DAVID BINDER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—A high-level private commission has prepared a policy blueprint urging that the administration of President-elect Jimmy Carter break new ground in relations with Latin America.

The report by the Commission on United States-Latin American Relations includes recommendations for early completion of a new Panama Canal treaty, a new diplomatic dialogue with Cuba, a stronger emphasis on human rights issues, restriction of arms sales and an economic policy geared principally to the needs of the poor.

The presence on the commission of seven persons closely associated with Mr. Carter gives the report considerable weight in terms of the direction and priorities of the next administration's Latin American policy, officials of the Ford Administration and supporters of Mr. Carter said.

Possible Implications Elsewhere

The new report is the second issued by the commission in two years. It goes substantially further than the first report and its accents are sharper. It flatly states: "Most issues in U.S.-Latin American relations can be resolved only in a global context."

Members of the Carter camp said the commission report was probably the first indication of the way the new administration would address foreign policy problems.

Teacher Shifts Stir Confusion Among Pupils

By DAVID VIDAL

"The case of Mr. Dudley taught me a lesson," said Conrad Johnson, a fifth grader. "Never get close to a teacher because she always leaves."

Before she lost her job, Linda Dudley was the favorite teacher of 10-year-old Conrad and most of the 31 other fifth graders of Class 5-304 at Public School 21 in Brooklyn. Was she the fifth teacher this class of bright pupils had had since September? Or the sixth? Who could keep track?

After all, 11 teachers had stood behind the desk in Class 5-304 in the three months since school began, six as temporary substitutes or fill-ins.

This constant turnover of teachers is a product of the deep cuts in teaching staff suffered by the public school system since June 1975. Because of the New York City fiscal crisis, nearly 13,000 teaching positions have been cut, either through attrition or the dismissal of those with least seniority.

A Continuing Problem

Many schools faced upheavals in their staffs, but mostly at the beginning of the school term. And while some schools were affected more than others, the turnover for the fifth graders at P.S. 21 was unusually severe.

For Conrad Johnson and his classmates from District 16, in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section, the problem continues. What is the price of this instability for Class 5-304? Attitudes toward teachers, toward study and toward school appear to be changing among these pupils who say they want to become doctors, lawyers and teachers. But it is more than that, as the students see it.

"It sorta hurts when they keep taking

CARTER CONSIDERING SPLITTING C.I.A. POST BETWEEN 2 PERSONS

ONE WOULD BE HEAD OF AGENCY

Second Would Be Main Intelligence
Source for White House—Andrus Chosen as Interior Secretary

By JAMES T. WOOTEN

PLAINS, Ga., Dec. 18—President-elect Jimmy Carter said today he was trying to determine whether the person he chooses to head the Central Intelligence Agency should also serve as the primary source of intelligence at the White House.

"It's a matter under study," he said at a news conference here at which he announced the selection of a longtime friend, Gov. Cecil D. Andrus of Idaho, as his Secretary of the Interior, and expressed some frustration with his still unsuccessful search for women willing to serve in his Cabinet.

Under present arrangements, George Bush, who directs the C.I.A., is simultaneously the Director of Central Intelligence, a separate White House advisory position in which he is the major conduit of intelligence information for President Ford.

Mr. Carter, whose views on the subject have been shaped to some degree by Vice President-elect Walter F. Mondale and James R. Schlesinger, a former C.I.A. director, suggested today that he is, at least giving some thought to altering the current structure.

Criticism Voiced in Senate Report

"I've noticed who will be the D.C.I. [Director of Central Intelligence]," he said, "and I've not decided whether or not that person should stay on as head of the C.I.A."

Mr. Carter also said, "If you have just one channel of intelligence coming to the President, that probably prevents the President from getting a broad picture of what alternatives are available and to check on the accuracy of reports made to him. I would like to be the one to judge between two major, perhaps conflicting, sources of information—not let some subordinate person, even the very powerful head of the intelligence community, make that choice for me."

One of Mr. Carter's appointments here today was with Theodore M. Sorensen, a speechwriter and special counsel to President Kennedy, who is said to be under consideration for the job of director of the C.I.A.

Schlesinger Sees Carter

Any separation of the roles would be opposed by many C.I.A. officials who have previously labeled such an alteration as an inefficient, inadequate and incompetent means of gathering intelligence for the White House.

But critics of the agency view contend that such opposition issues only from the organization's desire to maintain its pre-eminent position in the intelligence community and to protect its direct access to and influence on the President.

Suggestions of that sentiment were included in the report of the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence earlier this year. The Vice President-elect served on that panel and both he and Mr. Schlesinger, in private and public statements, have criticized the present structure at the White House.

It was said that Mr. Schlesinger was ousted from his job as Secretary of Defense by President Ford partly because

Scarcity of Snow in West Costs Ski Resorts Millions in Losses

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN

DENVER, Dec. 18—A dearth of snow at every major ski resort west of Denver is costing the winter tourism industry millions of dollars a day and threatens to damage the economies of some states if no appreciable snow falls before Christmas.

The sunshine on almost everyone's shoulders, is a curse at present. Almost all the important resorts in the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada—including Vail, Aspen, Sun Valley, Steamboat Springs, Squaw Valley, Snowbird and Alta—have only limited skiing or are not operating yet.

The situation is so bad that Vail has called upon the Ute Indians to perform snow dance Monday, the day after resident Ford is scheduled to arrive.

Prayers and Fasting

In Aspen, a minister is holding daily prayer sessions and is fasting until the snow falls. In Steamboat Springs, 500 women and employees turned out yesterday to shake snow off trees and to slopes.

"We're doing our praying at the bars," said an employee of Copper Mountain

Bukovsky and Corvalan Exchanged at Zurich Airport

ZURICH, Dec. 18 (AP)—Vladimir K. Bukovsky, a leading Soviet dissident, and Luis Corvalan Lepe, the Chilean Communist leader, have been freed from prisons in their homelands and flown here for an exchange today that was mediated by the United States.

The exchange took place at the Kloten Airport here, where a special Soviet Aeroflot plane carrying Mr. Bukovsky and his family and a scheduled Lufthansa flight with Mr. Corvalan and his wife arrived within five minutes of each other.

The two airlines parked about 500 yards apart on a runway two-thirds of a mile from the terminal area, where reporters were kept behind a heavy police cordon.

The Chilean, Soviet and United States ambassadors were present as Mr. Bukovsky and members of his family got into three automobiles that took them to the Swiss customs and immigration checkpoint.

Airport police officials said the Corvalan left for Moscow on the Aeroflot plane less than an hour after his arrival.

Wearing a brown fur hat and a gray coat, Mr. Bukovsky later appeared at the terminal, where he told reporters in broken English, "I am happy but I am very tired." His face was pale and he appeared near exhaustion.

"I am not feeling well," he added when reporters pressed him for interviews. At one point, he held up his wrists to show marks left by handcuffs and said he had been handcuffed until the airliner had left Soviet airspace.

"Please leave him alone," pleaded his mother in tears. "He is tired and he is sick. She said he suffered from a rheumatic heart condition, a liver ailment and ulcers. Swiss sources said Mr. Bukovsky might go to a hospital for a thorough checkup.

The exchange was thought to be the first involving political prisoners in the history of East-West relations. Previous prisoner exchanges have involved captured spies.

Sakharov Proposed Exchange

The exchange was first proposed by Andrei D. Sakharov, the Soviet dissident physicist and leader of a Soviet human rights movement. The Chilean military Government agreed, but it took more than a month of secret negotiations before Soviet approval was obtained, according to diplomatic sources in Moscow.

The United States acted as an intermediary for the two countries. The Russians severed diplomatic relations with Chile after the military coup in 1973 against the leadership of President Salvador Allende Gossens.

Mr. Corvalan had been held since shortly after the 1973 coup. He was reportedly released last night from the Tres Alamos detention camp near Santiago. He flew out of the Chilean capital with his wife, Lida.

Mr. Bukovsky, his mother, sister and an ailing nephew boarded the Aeroflot plane at a Soviet military airfield north of Moscow. Mr. Bukovsky was taken to the field from a prison camp. A former university student and civil rights activist, he was sentenced in 1972 to a seven-year prison term for "anti-Soviet activities."

Mr. Bukovsky gained recognition in the West for drawing attention to a Soviet practice of confining apparently sane dissidents in mental hospitals. He himself was held in psychiatric clinics.

He told reporters he planned to stay in Switzerland several days and then go on to Britain. David Markham, the British actor, has invited the Bukovskys to his farm in Sussex. He said the Soviet dissident wanted to stay for a while in Switzerland to be near his 15-year-old nephew, Mikhail Ivanov, who was operated on Thursday for a blood disease, reportedly leukemia.

Mr. Markham, who campaigned privately for Mr. Bukovsky's release by trying to adopt him, said the dissident had not known until his arrival that he was being exchanged for the Chilean Communist leader.

The Soviet Union awarded Mr. Corvalan the Order of Lenin, the highest peacetime Soviet decoration, in absentia on his 60th birthday last September. He was expected to be among the honored guests at Moscow's official celebration tomorrow of the 70th birthday of Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet Communist Party leader.

The Soviet and East European press, which earlier had denounced the exchange proposal as "outright impudence," hailed the release of Mr. Corvalan as a "victory of international solidarity" but did not mention the release of Mr. Bukovsky.

The Chilean mission to the United Nations office in Geneva praised the exchange as a success for "humanitarian principles" and thanked the United States and Swiss governments as well as the Denmark-based Sakharov Committee "for the assistance rendered in obtaining Bukovsky's freedom."

Chile's military Government said once that Mr. Corvalan would be tried for treason, but no formal charges were ever reported against him. He was one of thousands jailed following the military coup and was held a number of months on a frozen island off the southern tip of Chile before being moved elsewhere.

h African Blacks' Patience Running Out to The New York Times

JOHN F. BURNS

BURG, Dec. 18—All across this week, Afrikaners have been celebrating the Day of the Covenanting the Boers' defeat in 1838. The day is a public holiday in South Africa, but there was scarce celebration.

Leaders fanned out country, rededicating their supremacy, the leaders' ownership south of Johannesburg for prayer marking the day when the first shots were fired against apartheid's policy of separate development. Since June 16 at least 60 people have died in confrontations around the country, so ceremony, David Thebe of the black advisory commission, told the audience that he was fighting battles that have fought and that the cowards who had held the nation down. His remarks in speeches and editorials at political trials and circulated by underground have been warning the Government is fast running out. Flurry of Anxiety

There was a flurry of anxiety: exploded a bomb in a Johannesburg restaurant, injuring only himself while acknowledging that had been organized by the mood among leaders of the underground, hastened to reassure community that it had insurance that black leaders' best to shake. Chief Gatsho, who is recognized by the Prime Minister John Vorster, the largest black group, audience a few days ago government's intransigence to a white commitment to a "black" Such rhetoric has been place in recent weeks.

Black communities relatively vice commanders are saying their harsh response broke actors' will. But their actions, arrest and interrogation of leaders about rumors that a fresh outbreak of violence has nervousness persists. Action than on reform to rest. The official view re words of the Minister of Justice, James T. Kruger—that a majority of the blacks are "thankful for what the Government is doing to uplift them." That view conflicts with a recent survey finding that more than 70 percent of those polled in Soweto vigorously opposed apartheid.

Wide Opposition to Violence

Nonetheless, the Government appears to be on solid ground in maintaining that the black community as a whole opposes violent protest. Informal discussions with blacks, from wealthy businessmen to laborers, almost always turn to expressions of relief that the battles between policemen with automatic rifles and students with stones are over, at least for the time being—though even those who abhor violence concede that confrontation may prove more effective than suppression. The major exception to the opposition to violence is the students, whose persistence in buying police guns has impressed their parents even as it has frightened them.

The comment of a bus driver on the run between Soweto and Johannesburg was typical: "When I leave for work in the morning," he said, "my own boys call me an Uncle Tom. They condemn me for working for the white man, and in a way they're right. It would be better if we didn't go to work. But who's going to pay for their food and education if not me?"

The older resistance groups—the African National Congress and its offshoot, the Pan-Africanist Congress—have been committed to the forceful overthrow of white rule at least since the incident at Sharpeville in March 1960, when policemen opened fire on unarmed demonstrators, killing 72. With assistance from the Soviet Union and China, the groups recruit young blacks for terrorist training abroad.

Support in Court Ruling

Among groups that have sprung up since the older ones were banned, including the South African Students Organization and the Black People's Convention, the policy on violence is less clear. A 17-month trial of their leaders ended in Pretoria Wednesday with a finding that their statements had encouraged unlawfulness, but the judge ruled that they were not unequivocally committed to the violent overthrow of the Government.

All the same, their leaders' remarks have implied that violence is the only recourse. "Eventually blacks are going to move out of the townships into the white suburbs, destroying and burning, and when that happens there will be white panic," said one of the founders of the two groups, Steven Biko, in a discussion shortly before he was seized in a roundup of radical blacks. He has since been released.

The militancy of the student generation has affected the attitude of the older generation of Black leaders, who must take care not to be branded sellouts and traitors. For years the Government has pursued a policy of jailing or restricting the more radical black leaders. As a result, many of those with a claim to leadership outside the student movement have worked within the representational system, which makes them vulnerable to attack by young militants.

Since the unrest began in Soweto, the militants' views have been stiffening markedly. Whether they are homeland leaders, chosen by the Government to lead the tribal reserves, or members of the Urban Bantu Councils, which advise the authorities on the administration of the black townships, they now generally oppose pursuit of the piecemeal concessions they were seeking before.

Chief Buthelesi is a good example. He has long been considered a strong contender for the leadership of moderate blacks, but his speeches in recent weeks indicate that he is much less patient than he was.

White Leadership Abjured

White liberals have heard from Chief Buthelesi that the time is past when the struggle for black rights can be led by whites, seeking amelioration of the existing system. He has also told the white opposition parties that they should cooperate with his new group, ignoring the Improper Interference Act, which prohibits political links across racial lines.

Moderate blacks would probably accept gradual progression to equality as a commitment to the final goal could be obtained, but the Government, far from promising that goal, has offered only a handful of concessions since June, none of them altering the basis of apartheid. The compulsory use of Afrikaans as a teaching language in black schools, the original issue among student demonstrators, has been abandoned. A requirement that home buyers in the townships take homeland citizenship, abjuring rights as South Africans, has been abrogated, as has a 30-year limit on leasehold.

Percy Qoboza, editor of The World, the leading black newspaper, who was himself arrested last week, has repeatedly warned the Government that it is cutting the ground from under black moderates. Referring to discussions of changes, he has written, "The more often these talks are held, and the less these talks achieve, the more people turn against any hope of peaceful progress."

Chilean Envoy in U.S. Says Only One Political Captive, Communist, Now Remains

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—Ambassador Manuel Trucco of Chile said today that his country had only one political prisoner left following the release of Luis Corvalan Lepe, the Communist leader. The envoy identified the prisoner as Jorge Montes, another Communist official.

At a news conference in his Washington residence, Mr. Trucco declared Chile's readiness to exchange Mr. Montes for Comdr. Hubert Matos, a former associate of Fidel Castro, who is serving a 20-year sentence in Cuba for anti-Communist statements. Commander Matos was jailed in 1969.

Ambassador Trucco said Chile had hoped to make a Montes-Matos exchange part of the trade involving Mr. Corvalan and Vladimir K. Bukovsky, the Soviet dissident. But Cuba did not respond, the envoy said.

He said he had proposed the exchange idea on Oct. 27 through American intermediaries. Yuri M. Voronov of the Soviet Embassy responded Dec. 2, also through an American intermediary.

Asked about remaining prisoners, Mr. Trucco said there were 400 persons in detention as a result of arrests since September 1973, when the present junta overthrew the Marxist government of President Salvador Allende Gossens. But only Mr. Montes remains in prison under the state-of-siege law used against political opponents.

The envoy said the others had been sentenced by military tribunals for other offenses, including possession of weapons. Last month the Chilean Government commuted the sentences of 1,118 prisoners. Of these 735 have left the country and 383 are still seeking visas to emigrate, the envoy said.

4 West Germans Are Sentenced For Selling Fraudulent Titles

FRANKFURT, Dec. 17 (AP)—Four men accused of selling hundreds of bogus academic titles for the equivalent of $600,000 were sentenced today to prison terms ranging from 1½ to 8 years. The four were found guilty on charges including criminal conspiracy, fraud and forgery.

The stiffest term, eight years, was given to Karl-Friedrich Schwalm, the director of the organization that called itself the Anglican Free Church. His chief accomplice, Werner Nestmann, a 46-year-old former furrier, was sentenced to seven years and nine months imprisonment.

Mr. Nestmann testified that he bought doctor of divinity degrees by mail from the Universal Life Church in Modesto, Calif. He said he paid the American group $20 for each degree and then resold the titles for the equivalent of $400 to customers lured by advertisements in West German newspapers. The men also were accused of selling fictitious British academic titles for up to $28,000 each.

Polish Law Protects Businesses

W. Dec. 18 (AP)—The Polish government today approved a law to protect private businesses. The law rules ease the hard fiscal lot of businessmen and producers, who are burdened by heavy surcharges. They will also now receive the benefits of social security and health services. Businessmen now will pay one percent taxes, get raw material from the state and receive local government subsidies. There are some 200,000 private businesses in Poland, and the number is to grow to 250,000 by 1990.

Rejects Suite to Bar Canal Talks

Panama Canal Zone, Dec. 18 (AP)—A United States District Court today rejected a suit that sought to bar negotiations over a new canal treaty. Judge Guthrie F. Crowe said that he did not have the authority to order President Ford, Secretary Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander Ha, the chief United States negotiator, to appear before a Canal Zone policeman, Drummond, and later joined by others of the United States Command that the three officials be barred from negotiating a new treaty. The suit is on Panama's Contador Canal, and the number of talks is demanding greater sovereignty.

AIRES, Dec. 18 (Reuters)—A Peruvian sociologist has been blamed for that exploded in a Defense Ministry building here on Wednesday, killing 11 people and injuring 23. The Ministry identified him last night as Luis Diaz, 29 years old, who worked for the ministry since 1968. He was helping the police to capture sources said that Mr. Diaz had suspected of left-wing tendencies. Montoneros guerrillas had responsibility for the bomb, said it was to avenge the death of their leader, Norma Esther, who was killed in a battle with police on Dec. 2.

'Real Socialism' Bloc Ideologists

Dec. 18 (Reuters)—Top ideologists of nine Soviet bloc countries met at a three-day conference in Leningrad, with calls for a new in defense of Kremlin-style "ism." The theme of the meeting was the need to orthodox in the Soviet Union independent lines taken by communist parties in the West. But they were careful to avoid public criticism of European parties. Theoretician, Konstantin Zarembo, attacked the Bulgarian press as attacking Western ideas of democracy and saying that socialist transformations of societies were impossible unless the Communist Party played a leading role.

Jordan Guerrilla Hanged for Hotel Attack

Jordan, Dec. 18 (AP)—A Palestinian guerrilla was hanged at 7 for taking part in an attack on the Inter-Continental Hotel on a Government announced. The guerrilla, named Omar, was the only surviving four guerrillas after Jordan's stormed the hotel and freed captured guests. The guerrilla, who authorities said was from the Israeli-occupied West Bank, was shot to death Dec. 9 by the Supreme Court.

Yugoslav Vote to Allow Free-Trade Area

Dec. 18 (Reuters)—Parliament today voted a treaty allowing a free-trade area in Trieste, formally ending 30 years of territorial squabbling between Italy and Yugoslavia. The treaty, approved last night, will allow free trade in both directions, provide industry in both areas, Yugoslav areas of Trieste and Yugoslav living in the Italian zone full legal rights. The agreement a year ago, Italy relinquished its claim to an area east of Trieste as Zone B, while Yugoslavia renounced Italian sovereignty west of Trieste, called Zone A. The agreement, said the Italian Democratic parliament, would end any uncertainty and it is now time for development cooperation with our Yugoslavians," he said.

Ethiopia and East Germany Trade, Cultural Pacts

ADABA, Ethiopia, Dec. 18 (France-Presse)—Ethiopia and East Germany signed trade and cultural agreements here today. The agreements were initiated for East Germany by Minister Oskar Fischer, on an official visit here since Thursday. Signatories were the Permanent Secretary of Commerce and Tourism, Asha, and the Minister of Culture, Youth Affairs, Akilu Habte. The terms of the trade agreement will buy light and heavy equipment from the East German. Ethiopia will sell East German livestock, hides and skins.

Oil Conference Brought Qatar Brief Grandeur

By ERIC PACE

Special to The New York Times

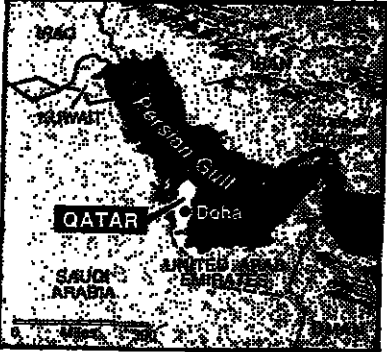

DOHA, Qatar, Dec. 18—A sports-loving Qatar prince has been worrying about his image in Washington. Desert-bred Qatari officers have gained experience in crowd control. Party hosts in this unsophisticated capital have encountered a servant problem.

The remote Arabian emirate of Qatar has grown a bit grander and more worldly from playing host to this week's three-day conference of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

This is not a very big country, but the people feel that their place in the world has grown, a traveler was told by Jamil Bahbah, a Qatar administrator, as delegates from the 13 OPEC countries continued their long hours of wrangling over oil prices here.

Qatar is essentially a small city. Doha, with a population of roughly 100,000, attached to a swatch of sparsely inhabited desert about the size of Rhode Island and Connecticut combined.

Beneath that desert are oilwells that yield $2 billion a year in revenues and enable the Qatar ruling family to provide lavish hospitality.

And so the Qatari Government invited the OPEC Caimitos to have their conference here and has thought nothing of providing a few dozen new Mercedes cars for the occasion and offering the delegates free telephone service to any point in the world.

And so also Qatar's high-born Oil Minister, 26-year-old Sheikh Abdel-Aziz bin Khalifa al-Thani, found 200 reporters hanging on his every word as he answered their questions before the conference began in the State-owned Gulf Hotel here.

The sheik, a son of Qatar's ruler, who is a fervent soccer fan, called for an oil-price rise—which was opposed by Washington—and then paused, reflected, and said amiably, "I hope the Americans are not too mad at me now."

The sheik's father, Sheikh Khalifa bin Hamad al-Thani, was on hand to address the opening of the conference and he beamed when the Indonesian chief delegate, Mohammed Sadli, made a speech praising Doha as "this gracious, lovely and hospitable capital."

Such recognition is thirsted for by Qatar's relatively large upper crust—the 66-page national telephone listings contain more than two pages of sheikh. The family of the ruler is proud of its traditions—it moved here two centuries ago from what is now Saudi Arabia—but these have attracted little attention abroad.

In recent years, Qataris have taken various steps to gain international recognition. In the last decade alone, Qatar has issued more than 600 new postage stamps. And in April this year it played host to a tournament of soccer teams from the Persian Gulf region, for which the rulers of other gulf sheikdoms flew in planeloads of fans.

Oil-World Celebrities

Such activities were outclassed by this week's conference, which brought together such oil-world celebrities as Saudi Arabia's Oil Minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, and Iran's chief oil negotiator, Jamshid Amuzegar. Though the conference ended in a deadlock and a painful split in oil-pricing policy, the Qataris did their best to provide it with a serene environment.

The deputy commander of Qatar's armed forces, Brig. Gen. Mohammed Attiyah, scion of an old clan, paced the lobby of the Gulf Hotel, walkie-talkie in hand, to insure that the conference was not disturbed by possible terrorists or by the swarms of journalists and other onlookers thronging the hotel's ground floor.

"Thanks be to God," he said. "There is no problem."

Qatari soldiers were in position around the hotel.

"The men are proud to do their duty," he added.

The Doha bureaucracy also threw itself with enthusiasm into activities befitting a diplomatic center. Political billboards were put up along city boulevards proclaiming such slogans as "Control of nations over their natural resources is an inalienable right," and the Qatari national radio service marked the convening of the conference by inaugurating a morning English-language disc jockey program playing Western tunes.

The conference also touched Qatar's people, who have largely given up such traditional pursuits as fishing and have concentrated in the Doha area, where much new housing has been going up. Some taxi drivers charged double the usual fare for rides in the neighborhood of the Gulf Hotel. Extra servants became hard to find because so many Doha waiters were put to work serving visitors who had come here for conference.

Officers watched as OPEC potentates came and left in motorcades, guarded by steel-helmeted policemen and heavy machine guns.

Though no activities by any would-be terrorists were reported, and there were no arrests, some logistical problems arose—a crowded Gulf Hotel elevator carrying foreign visitors to Sheikh Yamani's suite got briefly stuck, causing panicky onlookers to cry inaccurately, "They're dying in there!" as passengers pounded on the elevator walls.

And OPEC employees temporarily ran out of copies of the final declaration. Yet such occurrences did not dilute the Qataris' sense that, as officials repeatedly declared, "The eyes of the world are on us," and that what the world was seeing was good.

IRAQI AIDE CONDEMNS SAUDIS ON OIL PRICE

its at a Campaign of Subversion in Arabian Peninsula to Force Change in 'Reactionary' Line

By FLORA LEWIS

DHA, Qatar, Dec. 18 (AP) — Expected of nerves between Saudi Arabia and oil producers opened today, immediately after their Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries finished a meeting here with a split over oil prices. In his return to Baghdad, Iraq's Oil Minister, Tayeh Abdel-Kerim, said Baghdad airport that his delegation had "unmasked Saudi Arabia as a capitalist and compromising reactionary working inside and outside OPEC against the interests of its people and against the interests of the oil-producing other developing states."

"We are confident," the Iraqi minister said, "that the Saudi plans will not succeed and that Saudi Arabia will be forced to follow the overwhelming majority of OPEC states under the pressure of the liberated world and Arab public opinion and under the pressure of the liberation forces of our people in Saudi Arabia the Arab homeland."

Support for Arab Militants

The Iraqis have supported extremist militant groups, reportedly including "Black June" faction, which has been used from the Palestine Liberation Organization for terrorist activity. The Iraqis have also sympathized with radical groups aligned against conservatism on the Arabian Peninsula. The implication is that the Iraqis are supporting the liberation forces of our people in Saudi Arabia, which seemed to be subversive activity.

The Iraqi statement appeared to be part of an effort to induce Saudi Arabia to change its position on oil prices. At the meeting here, the Saudi Oil Minister, Sheikh Zaki Yamani, broke the production-solid front by announcing a 5 percent increase in prices throughout 1977. Only the United Arab Emirates joined him. The others raised prices by 10 percent starting Jan. 1, 1977 and announced an additional 5 percent increase for July 1. Both the Saudis and the other producers said they were confident they could force the other side to back down. The Saudis set to do so by raising their output, taking over a greater share of the market, and their opponents look to national political pressure.

One of the main arguments being used against the Saudis is that they are undermining the oil producers' role in the negotiations in Paris to insure better treatment of developing countries by the industrial states.

An Arab, a Qatar newspaper, said in an editorial today:

"OPEC has shown that it is its own people and can muster resources to serve the people, all mankind and the third world despite threats from industrialized nations attempting to maintain their domination and control of other nations' resources."

The editorial did not even mention Saudi Arabia, but the criticism was aimed. Though Qatar is one of the conservative Arab states, the paper echoed anti-Western attitude by calling higher material prices, including oil prices, a "reconstruction of the world economy on a new basis far from any economic exploitation and domination."

Kenya Daily Hails Carter's Choice Young to Be UN Representative

NAIROBI, Kenya, Dec. 18 (Reuters) — Appointment of Representative Andrew Young of Georgia as the United States delegate to the United Nations has, for the first time, given blacks a voice in the formulation of American foreign policy at the highest level, the Nairobi paper, Daily Nation, said today.

The paper said that the sight of a black man speaking at the world body did go down pretty well with many nations who have long accused administrations of treating blacks as second-class citizens.

It said it would be wrong to believe Mr. Young was appointed only on basis of color. Jimmy Carter had, it clear he was selected purely on merit, the paper said.

Well tickle
my toes, Calvin Klein

You know how Gertrude Stein used to say
"A rose is a rose is a rose?"
That's the way we felt about sandals until now, along comes Calvin Klein with a brand new line.

"Last year's sandals and this year's sandals are sisters under the sun" we thought. But that was Before Klein.
Before Calvin decided to turn his talents to shoe biz. Now we think no barefoot girl with toes of tan should go out in the mid-day sun (or dance by the light on the moon) in anything older than today's shoes-news.

Here's what's important here:
they're pancakes (as in flat as a). And that's the key to a whole new fashion proportion we saw in Paris.

Skirts are going fuller and flatter and flatter. And the shoes that go with them are barer and flatter. Which makes you look younger and happier. And which is (is it not?) exactly the way you want to look when you're resorting now and cavorting next summer.

These, from an exciting new Calvin Klein collection, are all
(even the flat-so heels) in a fine
Italian leather called Vachetta, which our dictionary says means calf. And it's colored a soft, pale tan to match your toes.

The fisherman's sandal in

CARTER SAYS SAUDIS WON'T INFLUENCE HIM

that in his earlier messages to Saudi Arabia urging restraint in oil prices both he and Cyrus R. Vance, the Secretary of State-designate, had given "no insinuations" that "special consideration" would be given to Saudi views "or in Middle East political decisions because of their actions on the oil price levels."

"I don't believe an oil-price decision should be a factor in ultimate decisions concerning the Middle East," Mr. Carter said.

This refusal to link publicly oil prices with negotiating progress has been the policy of the Ford Administration and Mr. Carter seemed to be adopting it.

Moderate Position a Factor

Yesterday the State Department said there was no link between the two. Nevertheless, State Department officials said privately that inevitably the Carter administration would have to take account of the moderate Arab position when it makes its policy decisions on the Middle East.

New appeals for an early Geneva conference on the Middle East are coming from Egypt and Syria, and even the Israelis have endorsed the idea of a conference.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has said he believes there is an improved opportunity for progress toward a settlement in the Middle East, given the support of all sides for a negotiated settlement.

The Saudi decision on prices will have to be considered as a factor in deciding how much support the United States should give to the Arab views on the Middle East, one official said today. "No administration will ever say: 'Yes, if oil prices are low we will push the Israelis,'" he said. "But it will be on everyone's mind anyway."

In discussions with the Israelis, an argument made by Mr. Kissinger in the past was that if they made concessions, this helped moderate elements in the Arab world who had risked the scorn of radicals by negotiating with Israel. Mr. Kissinger believed that Israel's security in the future was enhanced more by a negotiated peace with moderates than by military means alone.

Mr. Carter and Mr. Vance have avoided saying how they believe further progress should be made in Middle East negotiations although Mr. Vance has said that he believes the window was open now for a solution and should be taken advantage of.

Cairo Calls Saudi Move Political

CAIRO, Dec. 18 (Reuters)—The semi-official newspaper Al-Ahram said today that Saudi Arabia's refusal to agree to a 10 percent oil-price rise by OPEC countries indicated it was using oil as a political card.

In an editorial the paper's oil correspondent said Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter, not only linked oil prices with the Arab cause but also with "the North-South dialogue," a conference that was put off until next year.

In agreeing to increase oil prices by 5 percent only, Al-Ahram said, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates weighed political factors that had been overlooked by other OPEC countries that concentrated on economic factors.

The paper said it believed that Saudi Arabia did not wish President-elect Carter to be confronted with economic problems immediately after he was installed.

SEEKING AID FROM ARMS INDUSTRY

Use American Assistance to Build Up Domestic Production for Defense

Special to The New York Times
JERUSALEM, Dec. 18—Israel, seeking its military dependence on the United States, has informed the Ford administration that it would like to use American aid to build up its own defense industry.

According to American and Israeli defense officials here this week, Israel still needed American arms, and to take on more production.

Israelis thus hope to get more out of the American aid dollar. State Department officials believe that the Israelis, by using a greater share of arms, also expect to become less dependent on pressure from the United States to make political concessions to the Arabs.

As was said to have discussed the production of an Israeli heavy tank, the Charriot, and now in the final stage. This tank would supplant the American-built M-60, on order from the United States. The Israelis want the United States to let them of the aid to finance tank production in Israel, with some components American-made.

Production of F-16 Is Sought
Israel is seeking permission to produce about 40 percent of the components of the F-16 fighter. The United States agreed in principle to sell this fighter to Israel for 250. The issue is complicated by the fact that the United States sold the F-16 to a West European consortium, and the Israelis were assured that they would be in the sale to other countries.

Israelis also want to coproduce a high-speed patrol boat. For the fiscal year 1977, which ends in June, Israel will receive American aid of $1.8 billion, of which $1 billion is for military credits. For the fiscal year 1978, the Israelis have asked for $2 billion, which was the 1976 aid level. The State Department has scaled the aid down to $1.8 billion.

As was told that the Office of Management and Budget had cut the aid to $1.5 billion, about $300 million would be cut. Mr. Peres reportedly said that alone made it important for Israel to receive more than it has in the fiscal year, and he said Israel would not afford to accept less than that.

Supporters are predicting another Congress to increase Israel's aid. They are waiting to see what the new administration will do. The defense industry in Israel produces the Kfir C-2 fighter, powered with a General Electric engine. It also builds Reshet patrol aircraft guided air-to-air missiles, rifles. Since some of these items are sold abroad, Pentagon officials explained that the Israelis are not with American arms production.

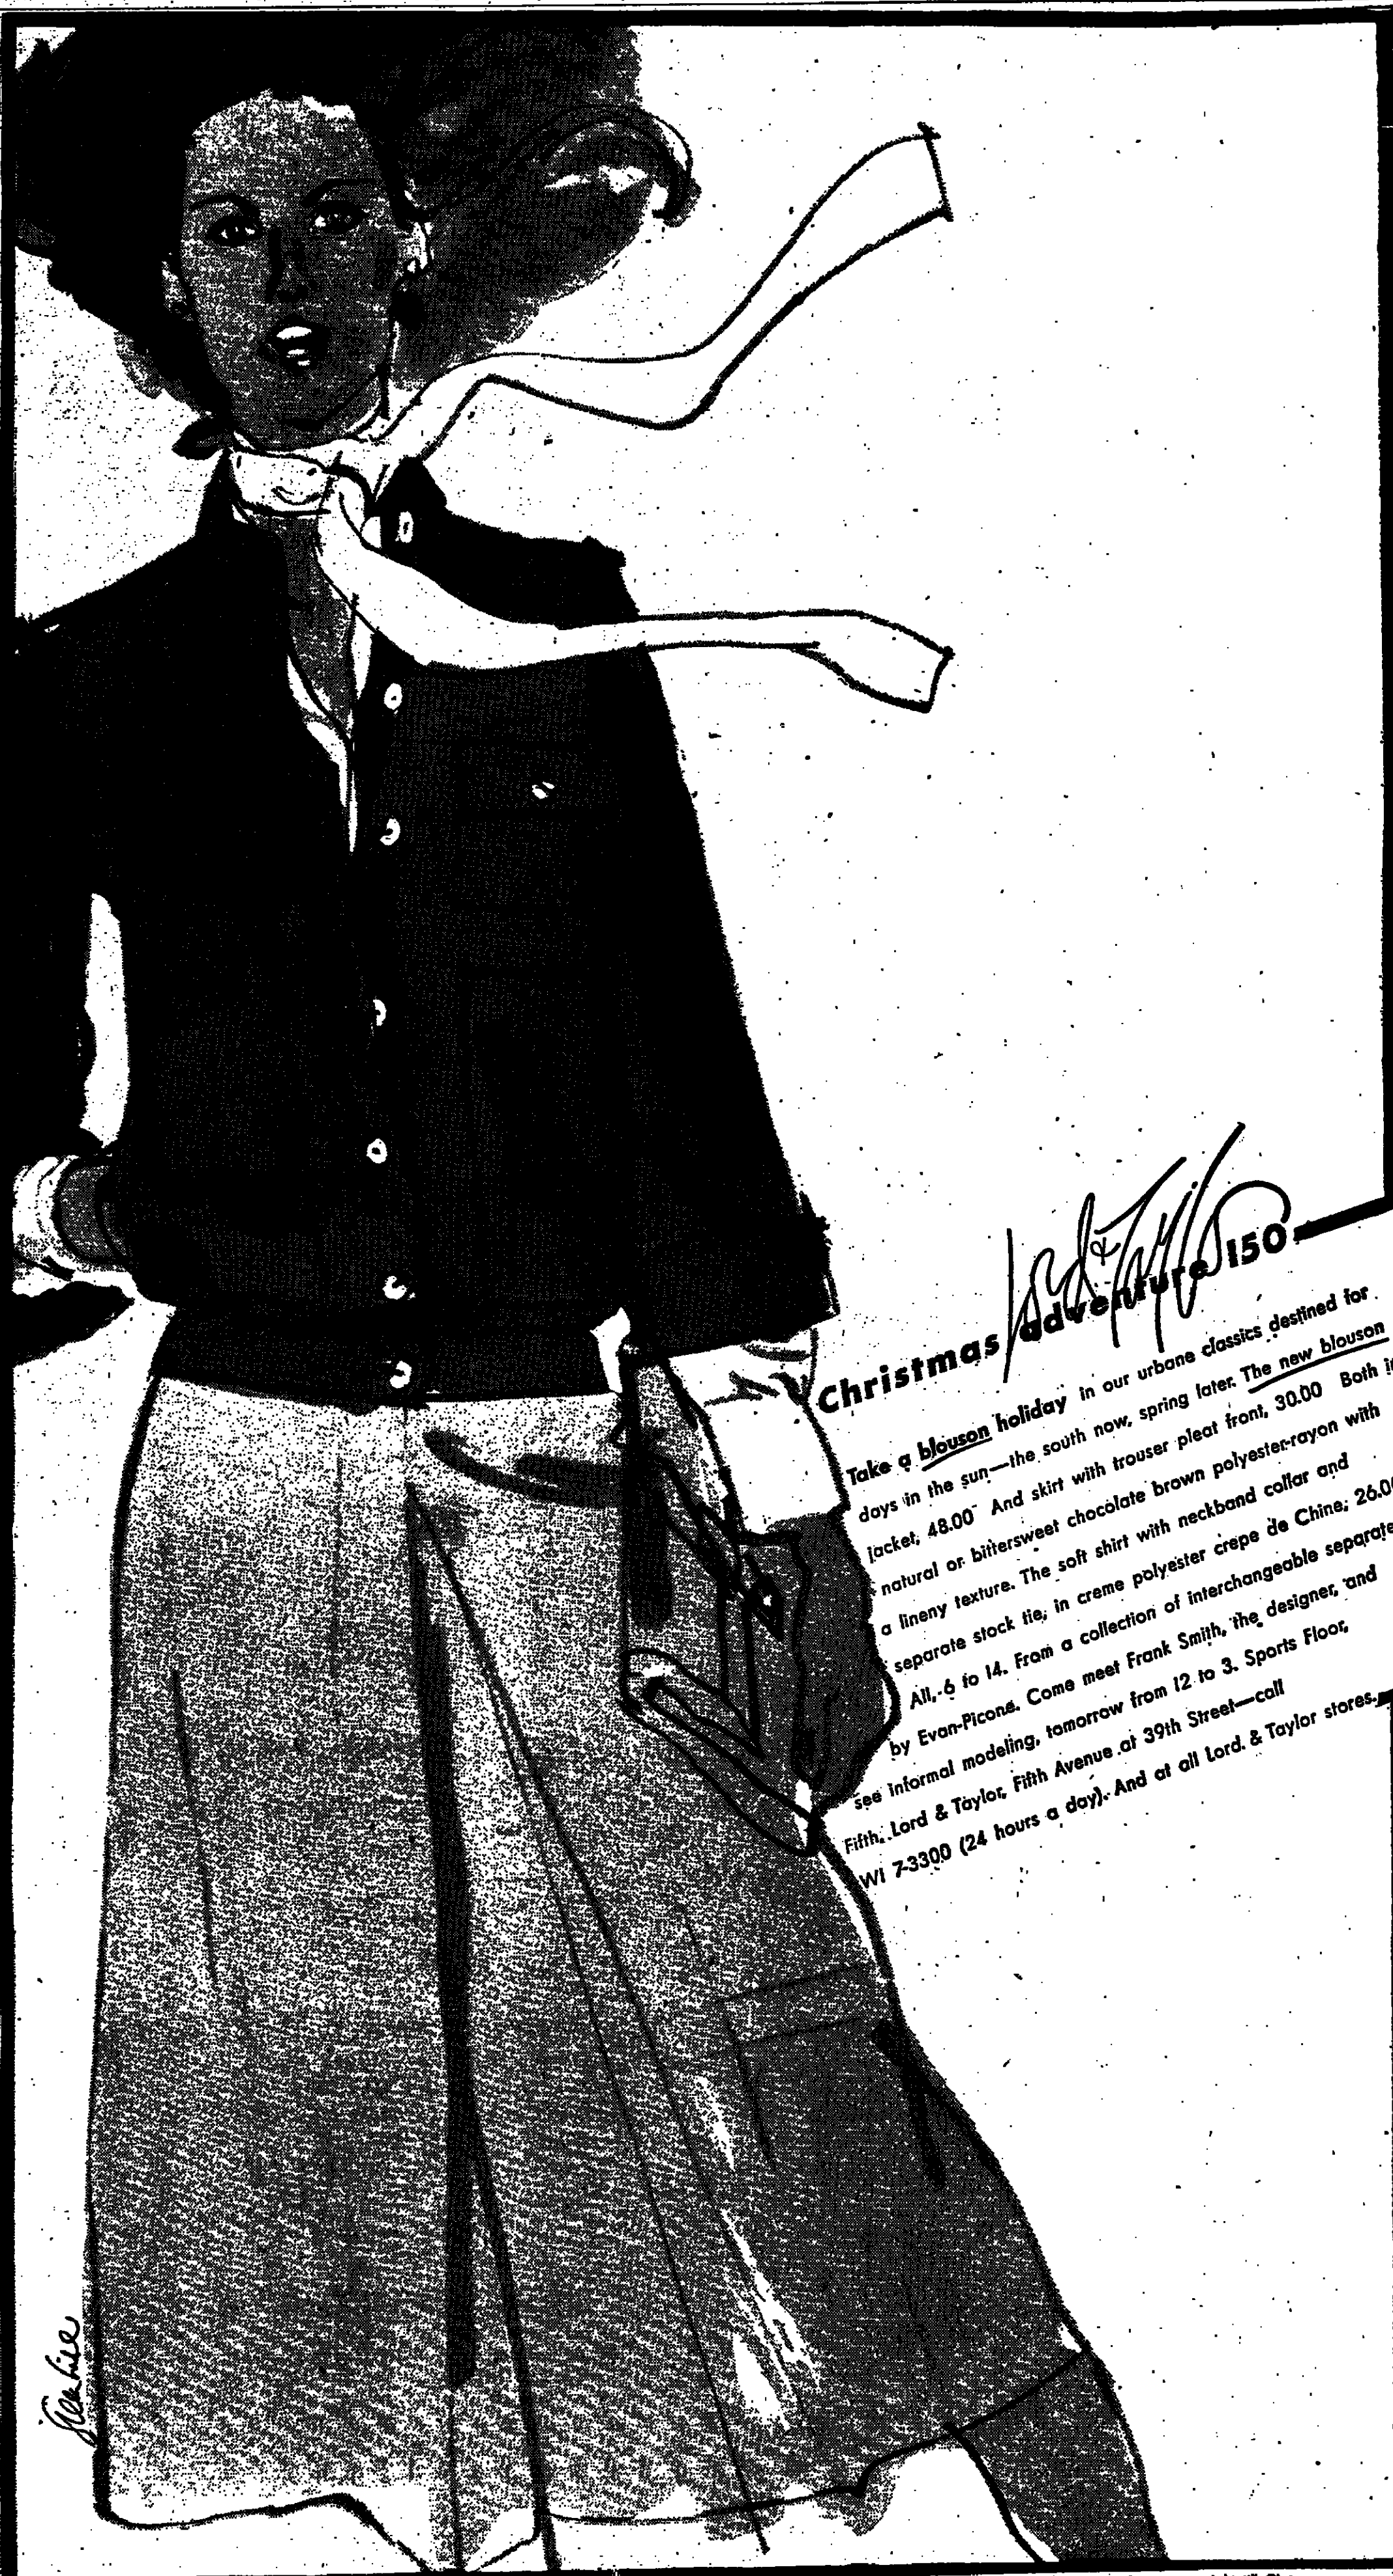

In 1976, Israeli arms exports were about $300 million compared with $100 million in 1974. About 17,000 Israelis are said to be in the arms industry, one of the largest in Israel.

Systems Are Described
The Kfir C-2 has been described as the lightest to incorporate space-age technology. It is lightweight—22,000 pounds and highly maneuverable, and has a radius of 500 miles. The Pratt & Whitney turbofan engine produces 25 percent more thrust per pound than previous fighter engines.

General Electric J-79 engine, which powers the Kfir C-2 fighter, was the first to achieve flying speeds of Mach 2 or twice the speed of sound. Selling its Kfir for about $5 million, Austria is reportedly considering the sale.

F-60 tank, manufactured by the original user, a British 105-mm gun. A modified version has been developed for use both for conventional and for missiles.

Base Gets Model Jet Fighter
US AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (UPI)—The first of eight new jets arrived here Friday, an Air Force spokesman said. The jet is the light 16A, built by General Dynamics Corp., which flies at twice the speed of sound. The Air Force expects to buy 650 of them.

Syrian Troops in Lebanon Seize Control of Another Critical Paper

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Dec. 18—The editorial offices and printing facilities of another Lebanese newspaper were occupied last night by Syrian troops in the Arab League's peacekeeping force.

It was the fourth paper to be taken over this week by the Syrians, who earlier warned that they would not tolerate press criticism of the Syrian soldiers seeking to restore order in Lebanon after a year and a half of civil war.

The occupation of the Beirut papers has touched off an uproar in Lebanese press circles.

A unit of Syrian soldiers broke into the offices of the paper As Safir last night while another detachment seized the newspaper's printing press at a different location. They Syrians checked identity cards and then ordered the journalists and workers to leave.

Talal Salman, editor and owner of the leftist newspaper, which supports the radical Libyan leadership of Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi, telephoned Prime Minister Selim al-Hoss and Interior Minister Salah Salman, but they were unable to do anything about the takeover.

When Riyad Taha, president of the Lebanese Press Association arrived on the scene, the Syrians refused to allow him into the building.

Prime Minister Hoss had just returned from a day-long visit to Damascus, where he met with President Hafez al-Assad. He was reported to have raised the question of the three other publications whose offices were seized by Syrian troops earlier in the week.

The publications included two dailies, Al Moharrir and Beirut, and a weekly journal, Al Destour. All three were supporters of the Iraqi leadership, which is a bitter rival of the Government of President Assad. In addition, Al Moharrir has Palestinian guerrilla connections.

All three publications continued to appear by using other facilities.

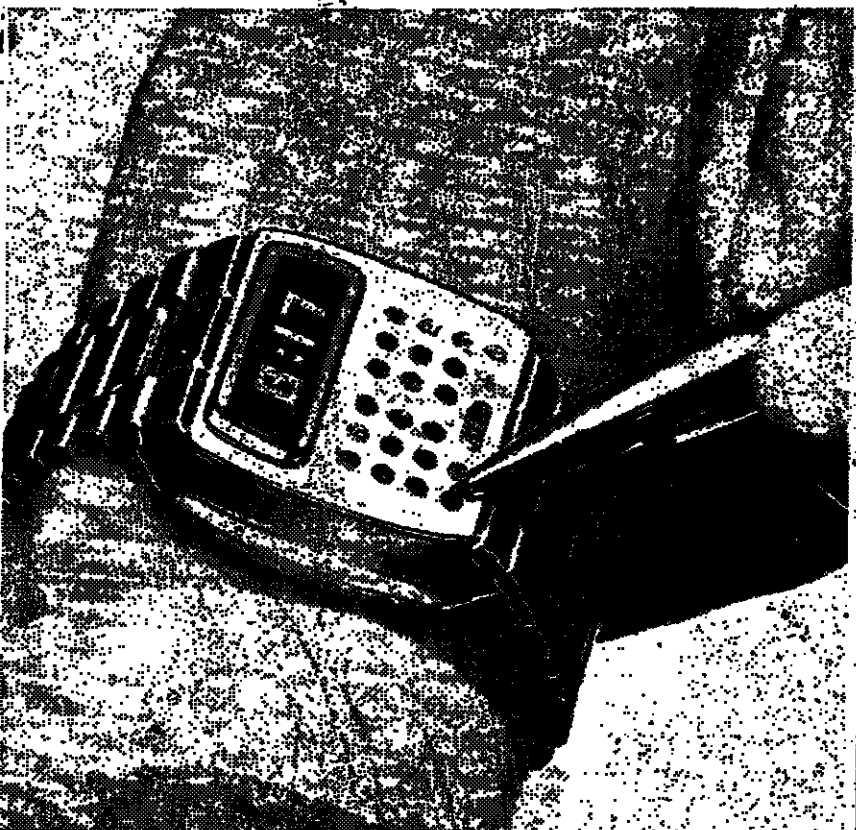

Michel Abu Jaudeh, co-editor of Lebanon's leading daily newspaper, An Nahar, said at a news conference today that his paper had received instructions by telephone on how the news should be reported. He did not say who had given the instructions.

Before the outbreak of the civil war, when Lebanon was a commercial, financial and information center in the Arab world, the country's free press was described as one of its major assets, although some critics said this freedom was exploited by one faction or another.

Despite the turmoil caused by the civil war, the number of publications in Lebanon increased rather than decreased. Before the crisis, there were about 150 publications, including 22 daily newspapers in Beirut.

British Troops Kill I.R.A. Suspect

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Dec. 18 (Reuters)—One man died and two others were seriously injured when British troops opened fire here today on a stolen car that crashed through a military roadblock and then refused to stop at another checkpoint. The security authorities believe the men were members of the Provisional Irish Republican Army who were planning to carry out a raid later in the day.

Austria Presses the U.N. on Moving More Activities to New Office Being Built in Vienna

By PAUL HOEMANN
Special to The New York Times

VIENNA, Dec. 18—Mayor Leopold Waldheim at the United Nations recently called on Secretary General Waldheim at the United Nations to hand him a new 1,000-gold piece and suggested that be used to pay rent for the United Nations office center here for the next years.

one symbolic schilling (6 cents) a year for occupancy. The offer is good for 99 years.

The Austrians would like to see some United Nations activities move to Vienna from headquarters in New York and from Geneva, where several agencies have their offices. But, to the bafflement of the Viennese, United Nations staff members are resisting the move. The issue is to go before the General Assembly before the end of the current session.

is expected to become in issue in elections scheduled for 1978, by which time the complex will probably be near completion. Political trouble looms if there are not enough occupants.

The complex comprises three office towers with concave facades and a low circular conference building. The facilities will be able to accommodate 4,500 staff members and hundreds of delegates.

Two United Nations agencies that already have their offices in Vienna will move into the new center. They are the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, with a combined staff of 2,500. This leaves space for 2,000 more civil servants.

Chancellor Bruno Kreisky has repeatedly said he wants a strong United Nations presence as an international shield for Austria's neutrality. Funds for the office center have been represented as a kind of insurance against entanglement in possible East-West conflicts. It is not a cheap insurance. Cost overruns have pushed estimates to nearly $1 billion.

"Vienna, despite its role in history, does not unqualifiedly appear to be an ideal office location," the newspaper Die Presse said in a sober mood of self-evaluation.

The Austrian capital, Die Presse observed, "has only a very pallid international flair," although it may continue to enchant music enthusiasts. Furthermore, it has become "a very expensive city, compared with New York."

U.S. Role in African Fair Imperiled

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

A shortage of funds is threatening to curtail American participation in the Second World Black and African Festival of Arts and Culture in Lagos, Nigeria, next month from 800 participants to fewer than 200.

Jeff Donaldson, chairman of the American committee for the festival, scheduled from Jan. 15 to Feb. 13, said this week that it had a commitment for $115,000, which could provide air transportation for 200 artists, writers, dancers, actors and scientists—and their exhibits—from New York to Lagos and return.

Mr. Donaldson, who is on leave as chairman of the Art Department at Howard University, said in an interview that it would take at least $400,000 to send the delegation.

Postponement After Coup

After the first festival in Senegal in 1965, Nigeria agreed to play host to the second, allocating $30 million and setting a goal of 25,000 participants from 75 nations and 100,000 visitors. A military coup caused a postponement, and the numbers were scaled down, with the American delegation declining from 2,500 to 800.

The committee has said that the United States Government must "assume full responsibility for the transportation and support of the full U.S. delegation, as has been done, under similar circumstances, by the Governments of Canada, Cuba and Brazil."

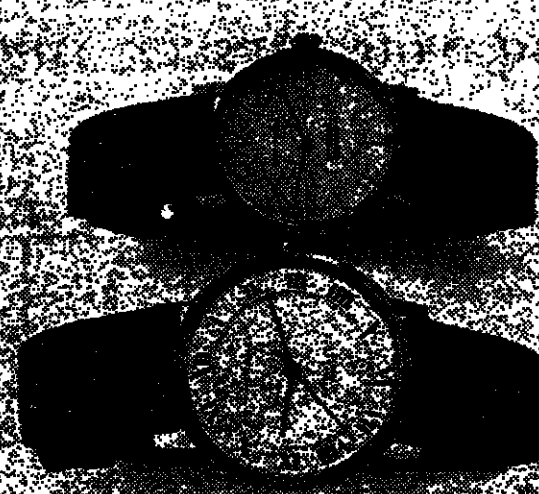

The State Department, which noted that each of the nations mentioned had "centralized" departments of culture, has encouraged the private sector to underwrite a larger part of the costs. A spokesman said the department had given $100,000 to the committee, while $50,000 was given by the National Endowment for the Arts. The department is prepared to provide $115,000 more to transport a plane-load, the spokesman added.

Rhodesia Says 10 Black Guerrillas And 5 Soldiers Have Died in 2 Days

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Dec. 18 (Reuters)—Ten black nationalist guerrillas and five Rhodesian soldiers have been killed during the past two days, a security forces announcement said here today.

The Rhodesian Army losses included two officers, Lieut. Bruce Burrell, aged 19, and Lieut. Anthony Carr, 24. The announcement did not say where the deaths occurred.

The casualties bring the number of soldiers killed this year to 118, the Government said, and to 193 since the war started four years ago. Guerrilla losses are put at 1,547 this year and 2,260 since the war began.

Security in the Basque Country, a Town Where the People Like the Captain in Charge of the Civil Guard

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

Spain—in the mist-draped Basque country it is hard to see where the stern Civil Guard is anything but an occupation force by hostile authorities. In this homely factory town of Tolosa, a town of 10,000, the head of the mucky Ori-

It was not an easy job to fill. The captain's predecessor had been removed after complaints of torture had reached, according to impeccable sources, Juan Carlos himself. "In those days," said a local priest, "almost anyone who was called in for questioning on 'political' matters was beaten, if only just slapped around."

Quickly Captain Alonso Valles made a favorable impression, appearing in civilian clothes in the cafes of Tolosa and chatting with local notables and with youths employed in the town's paper factories. Before, he had been posted in Barcelona; a native of nearby Biscaya, he seems to have come here with an understanding of Spain's festering regional problems.

"The word soon got around that he had been dumped here in Tolosa," said a politically active youth, speaking in the hushed manner and with the air of complicity that is so common in the Basque country. "It seems that he had tried to prosecute some right-wingers in Barcelona."

Shortly after the captain arrived, a funeral was held here for a militant of the Basque separatist group E.T.A. whose body was found in the nearby hills; the Basque flag was draped on the coffin. This captain's superiors were not pleased. One change soon noted in Tolosa was that aggressive, pistol-packing right-wing characters stopped appearing at night at bars and dances. And the captain specifically banned his men from carrying their handguns while in civilian clothes.

The end of September was an emotionally charged time in the Basque provinces, with a general strike in support of amnesty for political prisoners called for Sept. 27.

Demonstrations had been planned in Tolosa and the organizers asked the part-time mayor, a 39-year-old doctor named Pedro Recalde, to intervene with the captain to avoid a violent confrontation.

Dr. Recalde, nominally the captain's superior, worked out an understanding that the demonstration would be peaceful and that no slogans would be shouted against King Juan Carlos or the national flag. On the eve of the general strike, several thousand townspeople, including the families of prisoners who had kept a two-night vigil in the squat Church of San Francisco in the town square, marched through the narrow streets to the town hall. Civil guards stood by—without arms.

But, overnight, the captain was relieved of his command and locked up in the guard headquarters. The Civil Guard's orders throughout the region had been to disperse demonstrations, which he had not done.

And so, on the day of the strike, a second demonstration in front of the Church of San Francisco turned violent, as did others that day; tear gas, rubber bullets and riot sticks were the order of the day. Charged with disobeying orders, the captain was sentenced to two months and one day in a prison at El Ferrol del Caudillo, the birthplace of Franco.

Mayor Recalde, an essentially nonpolitical man, met with the 11 municipal councilors and reached the startling decision to resign in solidarity with the captain. Twenty-seven other Basque municipalities swiftly endorsed the action.

Abductors Won't Kill Madrid Aide

MADRID, Dec. 18.—The kidnapers of the rightist president of the advisory Council of State disclosed tonight that they had "canceled" their decision to kill him in light of the Government's "vague" promise of an amnesty for political prisoners.

To demonstrate that their victim, Antonio Maria de Oriol y Urquijo, was still alive, the kidnapers included with their latest statement, conveyed to an afternoon newspaper, a handwritten note from the 63-year-old former justice minister.

Last night Interior Minister Rodolfo Martín Villa rejected the kidnapers' latest demand for a declaration of a full political amnesty as the price for Mr. Oriol's life. But the minister said: "It has been and is the position of this Government to arrive at a generous use of clemency that makes possible the healing of deep and old wounds."

The new statement from the obscure October First Antifascist Resistance says: "Before the Government's promise, however vague, of an amnesty, we believe that the only security we have to make sure that such promises become reality is to keep our prisoner."

The Police Are Warned

"We have communicated to the president of the Council of State the cancellation of the decision to pass him before arms," the note said, adding warnings against police campaigns against "our organization and other antifascist parties."

Mr. Oriol's brief note, addressed to his kidnapers, says in part: "They have just told me of your decision changing what you had told me. For my part, it is idle to say that I accept. I have no option."

"My only grave preoccupation," the note continues, "is that my wife will not withstand this trial. For that reason, I believe it would not upset your plans to tell her that I am alive—which will help her survive the heart troubles that might occur. Many thanks. Antonio."

There was no immediate response from the Government, where a conviction seemed to have been growing that Mr. Oriol, a prominent member of the Franco era establishment, had already been killed.

Portuguese Feel the Pinch of Revolution in Food Shortages, Especially of Meat and Staple Codfish

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, Dec. 18—Portuguese housewives are beginning to feel the pinch of the revolution. Every day they have to struggle with long lines to buy meat, a growing black market for milk and other products and shortages of essentials such as potatoes.

Portugal now imports 52 percent of its food supply, but it is not enough. National food production fell and costs rose sharply after the April 1974 revolution, which disrupted the country's traditional economic structures. The most urgent problem today is the shortage of meat. Early last year in the heat of the revolution, many large landowners feared they would lose their farms and sold their cattle for slaughter or exported it clandestinely to Spain. Later the new collective farms also indiscriminately slaughtered cattle to raise funds to pay farmworkers higher wages.

As a result, the national market offered only 50,000 tons of meat this year, compared with more than 82,000 tons in 1975. This has meant that the country has had to import 44,000 tons of meat, or twice as much as last year, spending precious foreign exchange.

Even so, there has not been enough meat to go around. Beef is increasingly scarce in the fashionable Lisbon suburbs. Shoppers are switching to pork, which now sells for the same price as beef, about $6.66 the kilo, which is 2.2 pounds.

"I had to wait an hour in line to get a kilo of steak and what a triumph, it's the first fresh beef we've had in two weeks," a diplomat's wife said the other day in front of a nearly empty meatshop in the wealthy suburb of Res-telo.

Even Codfish Is Scarce

Things are worse in the working-class districts, where people used to eat fish instead of meat. Now even codfish, a national staple, is selling for $3.80 the kilo, if it can be found.

"At this point all we can afford is rice and beans and acorda," the wife of a construction worker in the working-class town of Amadora said bitterly. Acorda is a soup usually made of bread, oil and garlic.

Lisbon restaurants have been offering turkey for the last month to supplement the array of pork dishes and make up for the lack of beef.

At first people attributed the meat shortages to a rise in consumption produced by the general increase in wages after the revolution. But recent statistics show that the per capita consumption of meat in Portugal is only 70.4 pounds a year, one of the lowest in Europe.

The authorities have imported 15,000 calves from Ireland this year for breeding, but this is only a small beginning.

The Portuguese press has shown alarm over the meat problem since fish, the natural substitute, has also become increasingly scarce.

With waters off Canada and Greenland overfished and with new international restrictions, Portugal's codfish fleet brought in only 20,000 tons last year, compared with 36,000 tons five years ago. A recent announcement said that next year's quota for the cod fleet would be set at 10,000 tons, a reduction that amounts to a national tragedy.

CHINA SAYS 4 CHANGED KEY MAO QUOTATION asserts Leftists Revised Statement to Make It Appear He Wanted

Them to Be His Successors

HONG KONG, Dec. 18—China, today confirmed reports from unofficial Chinese sources that a major charge against Chiang Ching and three other disgraced members of the Communist Party Politburo is that they reworded a critical quotation by Mao Tse-tung to make it appear they alone were to be left in control after his death.

The party paper, Jenmin Jih Pao, said that the group had doctored the phrase "act in line with the past principles" and changed it to "act according to the principles laid down." The paper said they then published this in a major editorial on Sept. 16, a week after Mao died, without permission from the party's Central Committee.

Although the original phrase had only been Mao's comment on a specific policy question in April, the group was alleged to have said in an article circulated privately throughout China that it was Mao's final "masterly generalization" even "at the last moment of his life." The charges were made in a 9,000-word article by the paper's editorial department. It provided by far the most detailed account yet of the dispute in the party following Mao's death.

Inquiry May Be Near End
The appearance of such a long article suggests that the high-level investigation into the misdeeds of Miss Chiang and her three associates, now described as "leftists," may be reaching a final stage. The four have been under detention since their arrest in October.

While some of the enormous bulk of charges against the group seems to be statistical and designed largely to denigrate their character, the argument over Mao's last quotation seems to have been genuine and serious one.

Today's article also made these other allegations:

Shortly after Mao's death, the group tried to use name of the General Office of the Central Committee, an agency charged with high-level internal party communication to order the party committees of the provinces and cities to report directly to them. This was designed to "sever the communication between the Central Committee headed by Comrade Hua Kuo-feng and the localities," Mr. Hua, the new party chairman.

Beginning Sept. 12, three days after Mao died, Yao Wen-yuan, another member of the group that had control over the media, "time and again arranged for people to write to Chiang Ching their 'oath of fealty'" and appeal for her to be made the new party chairman, succeeding Mao, or husband, Miss Chiang reportedly was so eager that she couldn't sit still, while Wang Hung-wen, a third member of the group, had special portraits taken in preparation "to assume office."

The group also allegedly drew up an article titled "How Empress Lu acted according to the principles laid down by Emperor Liu Pang after his demise." That was to be used in conjunction with their word quotation about acting according to the principles laid down. Liu Pang was the first emperor of the Han dynasty, and after his death in 195 B.C., his empress managed to rule briefly, an action condemned by Chinese historians.

Soon after Mao died, today's article said, the fourth member of the group, Chang Hsueh-chiao, reportedly drew up an outline for seizing power—"How to consolidate a regime, kill." The article gave no further evidence that the group actually tried to take power by force or was involved in an attempted assassination of Mr. Hua, as has been rumored.

Unlikely as it might seem to outsiders, apparently the most heated issue that led to the crisis in Peking involved the doctored Mao's quotation.

Originally a Comment to Hua

Today's article reported that Mao made the original quotation on April 30 in a written comment to Mr. Hua, then the deputy chairman of the party, in response to a question about how to conduct the campaign against Teng Hsiao-ping, the ousted deputy prime minister.

"Take your time, don't be in a hurry to act in line with the past principles. With you in charge, you will be able to do it," Mao is quoted as having said. "You will be able to do it," she said, where Miss Chiang and Mr. Wang took note as to what Mao said.

After the group's article, the original phrase "act in line with the past principles" was changed to "act according to the principles laid down." The group's article said that the group had changed the phrase to "act according to the principles laid down."

Mr. Hua was said to have threatened the group and on Oct. 2 announced that he had ordered the group to be removed from the Politburo. He had announced for the United Nations, but two days later, a major article appeared in the Peking paper Kuanminjun that said "Chiang Ching and her three associates had changed the principles laid down." This was a major challenge to Mr. Hua, today's article contended.

Apparently the final blow came when Mr. Hua discovered that Mr. Yao had written another article, to appear on the day after Mr. Hua's death, in which he said that the group had changed the principles laid down.

of 1976 Jewish Emigrants

from Soviet Said to Near 14,000

GENEVA, Dec. 17 (Reuters)—The Commission has allowed about 14,000 Jews to emigrate so far this year, far below the annual totals of 20,000 set by the international resettlement organization, said here today.

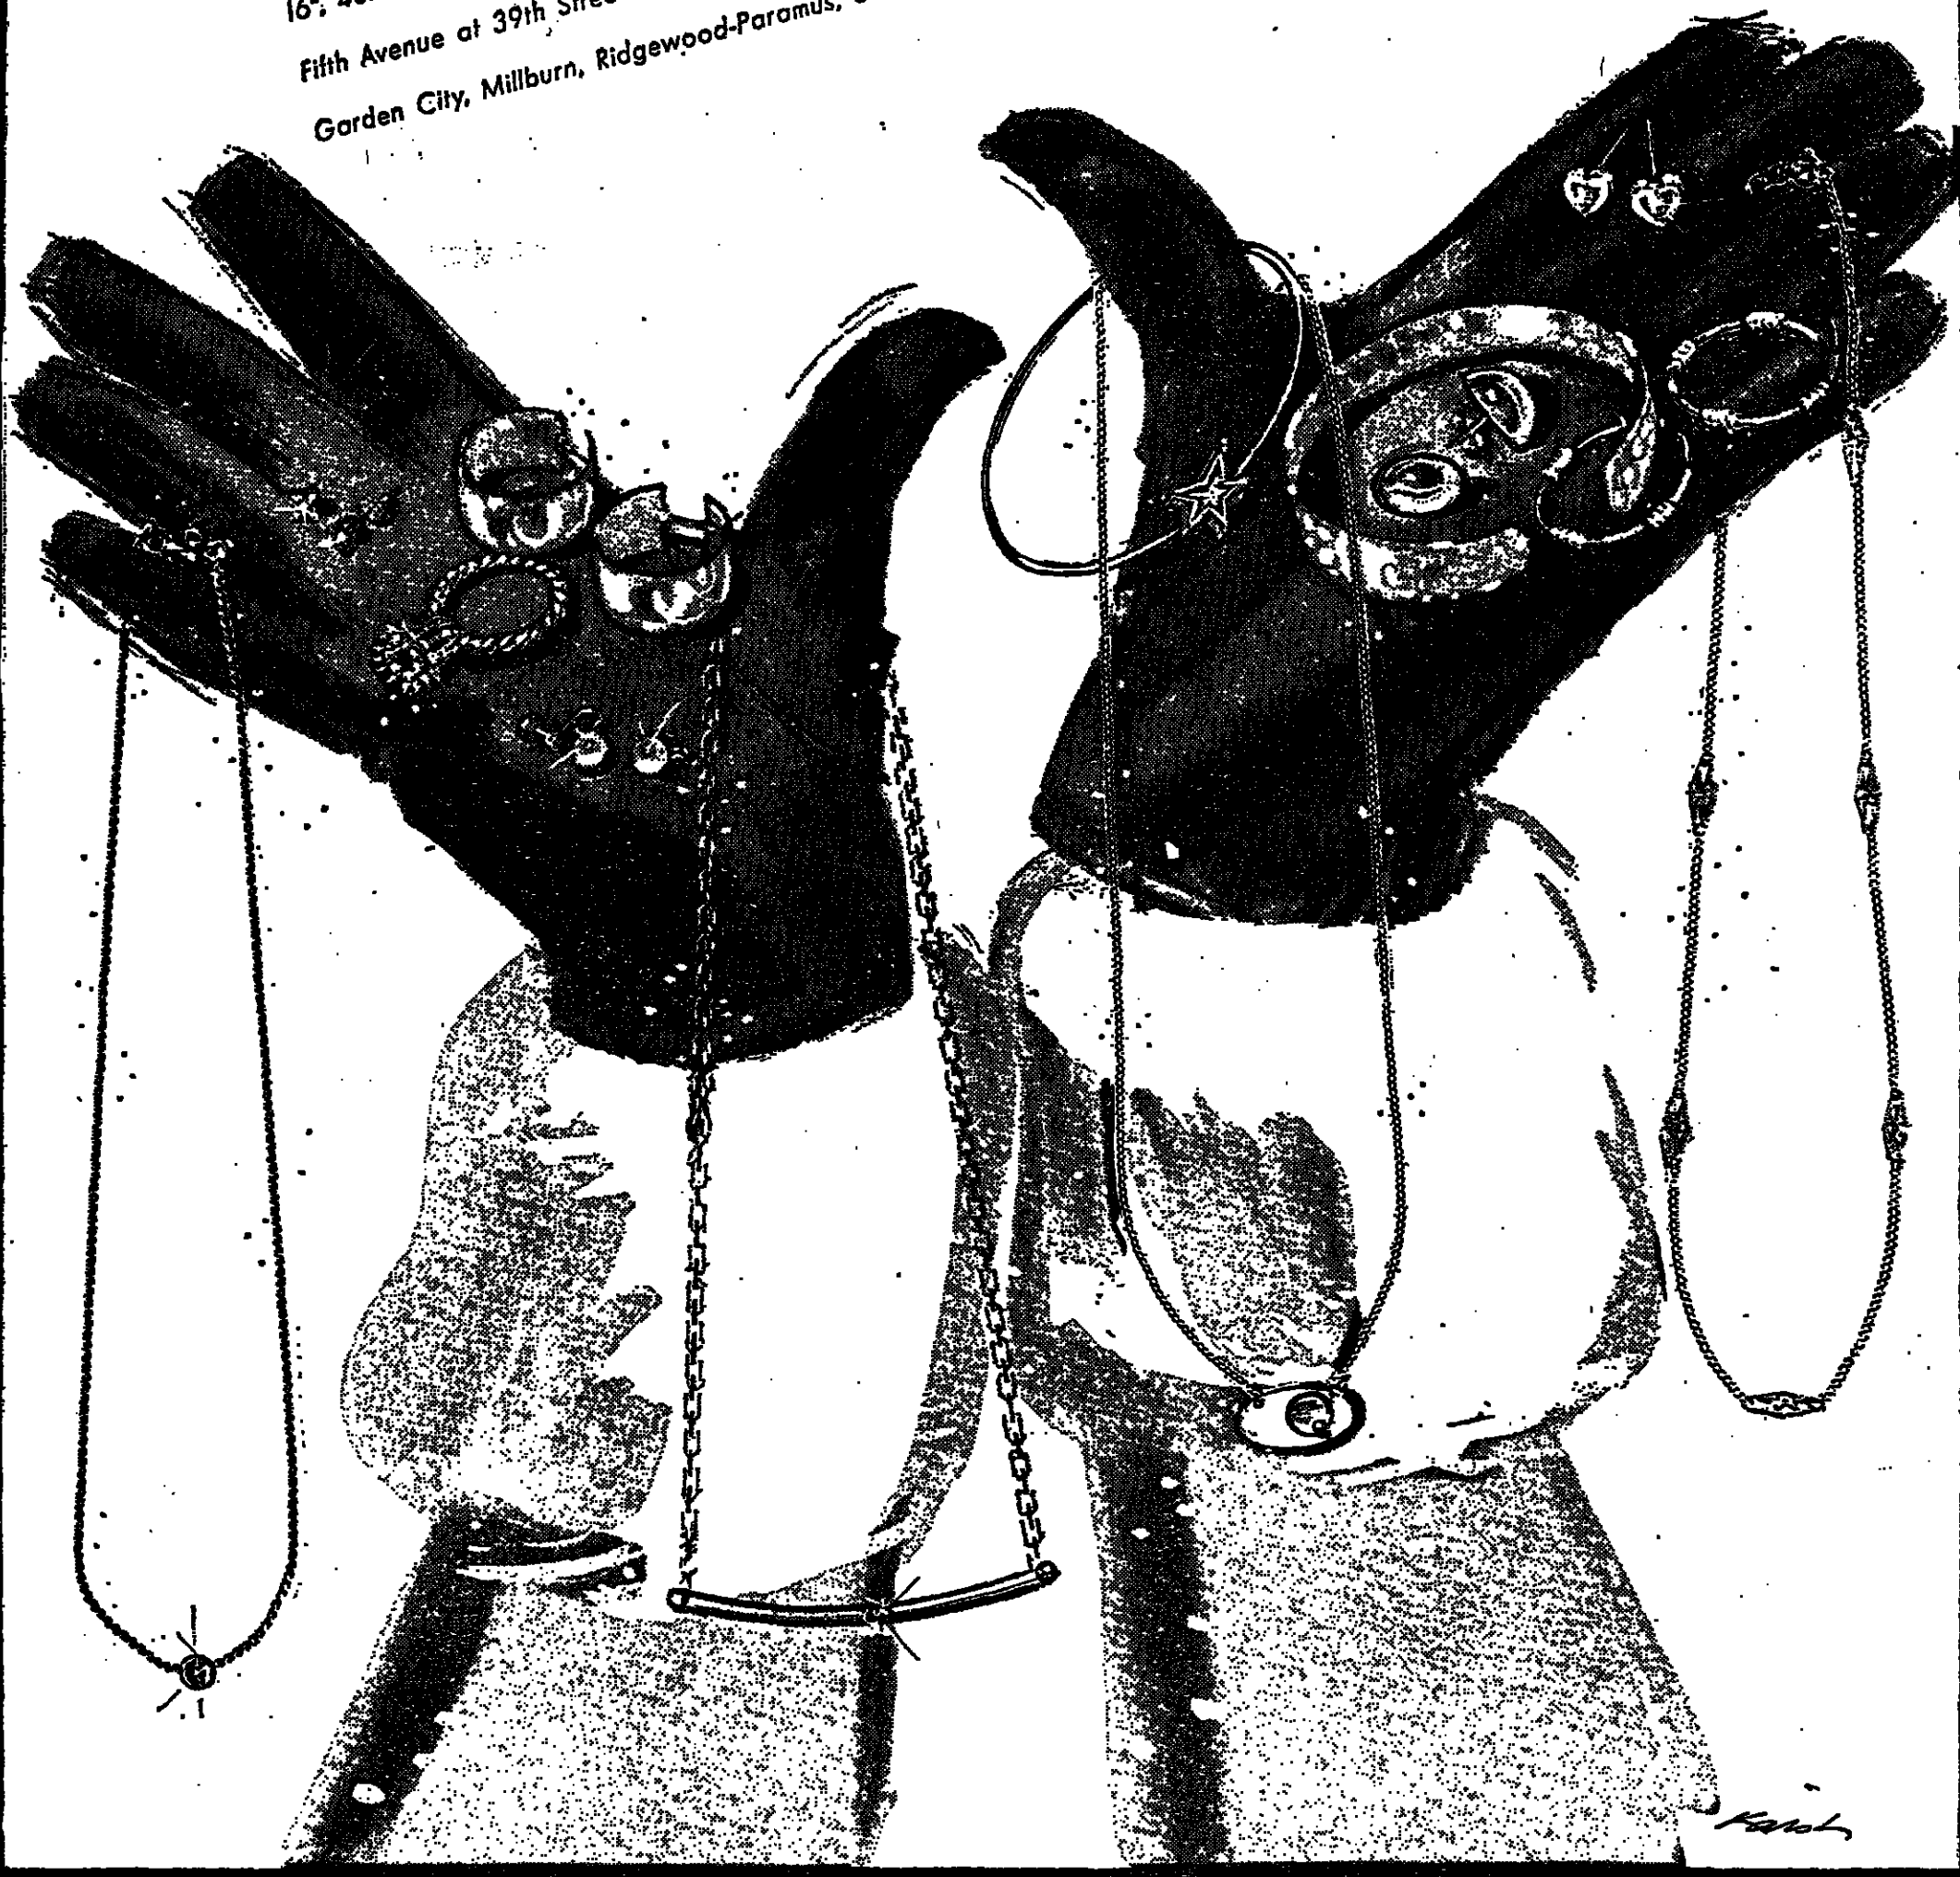

However, the number was about 500 less than in 1975, the spokesman for the Geneva-based Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration said. About half the emigrants arriving in Vienna, the transit point, went to Israel and others went mainly to the United States and Canada.

The spokesman added that at the present rate, the year's total was expected to go above 14,000.

Vietnam to Stress Human Needs

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
 Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, Dec. 18—Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, Vietnam's Defense Minister and the nation's senior military tactician, said in Hanoi today that its leaders still intended to emphasize human needs despite the vast plans for the overall economic and political development of the country already presented by the leadership.

General Giap's pledge came on the fifth day of the fourth congress of the Vietnam Workers (Communist) Party—the largest gathering of the Vietnamese Communist leadership in 16 years—as the congress apparently prepared to select the party's ruling Politburo and Central Committee. In a broadcast of the morning session, as monitored here, a Hanoi radio commentator referred in passing to the election of the Politburo and Central Committee. The radio, which has been carrying gavel-to-gavel coverage of the proceedings, did not return to the air for the afternoon session.

Western analysts in Bangkok speculated that the briefing was taking place this afternoon in the huge Ba Dinh conference hall in Hanoi, although it was not known when the results would be announced.

The composition of the Politburo and the Central Committee are expected to provide significant indications of the future direction of the party and the nation.

A key element in the economic planning of the country has been the concern with improving living standards.

"We are starting from rags and ruin, but we are determined to obtain enough cloth to make us warm and finally wear beautiful clothing, as people in an advanced society," General Giap told the 1,008 delegates and observers from the Communist parties of nearly 30 countries.

Earlier presentations by the party's First Secretary, Le Duan, and the Prime Minister, Pham Van Dong, had emphasized largescale development, the movement of populations, and foreign trade and investment.

Yet the leadership is clearly concerned about the increasingly vocal demands by the population, particularly of the northern part of the country, for an end to the austerity of the war years and a start at providing some of the luxuries they have had to do without.

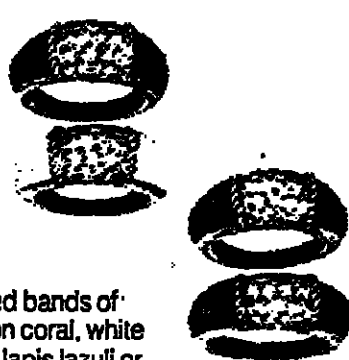

Possible Undercooking Causes Recall of 5,268 Canned Hams

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18 (UPI)—Wilson Foods Corporation is voluntarily recalling 5,268 cans of refrigerated three-pound hams of its Certified Tender-Made brand because some of them may be undercooked, the Agriculture Department announced yesterday.

Dr. Fred J. Fullerton, a department meat inspection official, said that a "major concern" in the recall was the fact that some of the possibly undercooked canned hams "may not appear defective to the eye, and might possibly be eaten."

Ring Scheduled Bias Charges by Choir Singers

A Black Caucus of the Episcopal Diocese of New York will hold a hearing on charges of racial bias in the choir of the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist.

All of the six members of the evening choir as well as the 17-member choir that sings at morning services and a group of standby singers are white. The church's congregation is about 20 percent black.

The third singing group at the church, the boys choir, has 13 white and six black youngsters.

Bias Charge Is Denied

Richard Westenburg, the cathedral's director of music, denied in memoranda to church officials that bias had been a factor in the dismissals of the two black choir members, Thomas Moore and Derrick Butterfield.

Mr. Westenburg, who took over all church music programs in June, said that he had readjusted all members of the morning and evening choirs—all of whom are paid—and found that the two singers among others did not perform up to the musical standards he had set.

Inquiry Panel Named

After he became music director, Mr. Westenburg reduced the morning choir to 17 members from 32 singers. The 15 members who were dismissed included the few blacks in the choir as well as several white singers.

The six-member evening choir was reestablished after the two black members and the three white members were dismissed. The sixth member, a white, was retained on a standby basis.

The dean of the cathedral, the Rev. James Morton, said that allegations of bias were unfounded and were "based on very serious misinformation." A three-member committee of church trustees has been named to look into the matter, he said.

The trustees' committee is headed by Judge Ivan Warner of Criminal Court, who said Friday that he planned to investigate the charges next month.

The Rev. Errol A. Harvey, vicar of St. Andrew's Church in the Bronx and chairman of the Black Caucus's grievance committee, said that the hearing would be held Tuesday evening at the Church of the Intercession, Broadway at 155th Street.

"We want to get at the truth," Mr. Harvey said.

Miner Acused of Phoning Threats To Bomb Place Where He Works

HARTFORD, Ky., Dec. 18 (UPI)—A 20-year-old coal miner from Muhlenberg County, Ky., has been charged with terroristic activity for allegedly making a series of telephoned bomb threats to the Peabody Coal Company's Alston No. 4 Mine at Centertown, Ky., the state police said today.

William T. Rich of Central City, an employee at Alston, is accused of making eight bomb threats to the mine office between Aug. 23 and Nov. 30, the police said. He was arrested Friday night and was held in jail on $4,000 bond after a month-long investigation by the authorities.

A Frenchman Sells Doors by Day And a New Catholicism by Night

By JAMES F. CLARITY

Special to The New York Times

BOBIGNY, France, Dec. 18—For 40 hours a week René Santraine sells windows and doors, hustling around the Paris suburbs and earning $175 a week.

Some nights he works as a member of the cultural committee of this Communist-administered town of 50,000 in the industrial "red belt" around the capital. And six nights a week the 48-year-old salesman celebrates mass, usually alone, in the quiet of the externally shabby Gothic church of St. André de Bobigny, of which he is the pastor.

Father Santraine, who has not worn clerical clothes for 12 years, leads a double life because he is one of 800 priests who, as volunteers in the worker-priest movement, feel that they are the vanguard of the new Roman Catholic church in France. The movement, suppressed by the Vatican in 1954 because of its leftist orientation and permitted to resume its unorthodox missionary work in France in 1965, is growing steadily now that it is not being harassed by Rome or by the church hierarchy in this country, where the number of practicing Catholics has been declining for decades.

Despised or Ignored

The movement is an attempt by a minority of the 38,000 priests in France to bring Christianity, but not necessarily traditionally Christian ritual, back to the millions, many of them industrial workers influenced by the Communist Party, who for generations have despised or ignored the church.

Most of the priests, like Father Santraine, work in areas dominated by the Communists and by labor unions closely affiliated with the Communist or Socialist Parties. Some, unlike Father Santraine, are political leftists, even Communists, in every aspect of their lives except religion. Interviews with a number of them indicated that their goal is the same: to show their companions on the job that a priest can be a decent human being will to live a worker's life without preaching or attempting to attract people back to the formal church.

The worker-priests insist that the movement is not subtle propaganda geared toward conversion. "It is just to show people that a worker can also be a believer, to open up a kind of dialogue, to make people see that religion is not the opium of the people," a priest explained.

Most of the priests, whose average age is 43, work in factories, where many of them are activists or delegates in Communist or Socialist-dominated unions. They put their salaries, perhaps $125 or $150 a week, in a common treasury.

Working in Other Fields

In recent years an increasing number of volunteers in the movement, which has been enlisting 50 men a year, are, like Father Santraine, working in other fields. Perhaps a quarter are in local civil service or small private companies. One is a hotel bellhop, another a file clerk in a police headquarters.

The priests report periodically to the diocesan bishops, but their activities are not controlled by the bishops. They receive little financial help from the French hierarchy and they are not obliged to give any of their pay to the church.

Some of the priests are reluctant to give their full names or to be photographed because of the difficulty they say they have in getting and holding jobs, gaining the confidence of fellow workers and overcoming the distrust of employers, who often view them as educated troublemakers.

Father Santraine talked about his double life—he performs marriages and baptisms and hears confessions on weekends—as he sat in his rectory office and took a lunchtime stroll around the angular public housing that dwarfs his gray, steeped church.

Quebec's Government Plans to Revise Law to Reinforce Position of French as Key Language in Province

By HENRY CINIGER

Special to The New York Times

MONTREAL, Dec. 18—Quebec's new government has begun efforts to reinforce the position of French as the only official working language of this province.

The campaign to make Quebec's cultural and language identity more distinctive appears to be part of the preparation to achieve Quebec's independence in the next few years. The provincial government's principal legal base is the Official Language Act, which was passed in 1974 under the previous, Liberal government.

This law, contested and attacked by those who do not speak French in Quebec and other parts of Canada, sought to establish the primacy of French in education and in work; it will now be made even more stringent in the future, according to plans announced for its revision.

The new campaign was indicated at the opening of a special session of the Quebec Assembly Tuesday when the speech from the Throne, a statement of Government policy delivered by the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec in the name of Queen Elizabeth II, went against a century of tradition: It was entirely in French.

A few sentences or paragraphs were always spoken in English as a gesture to Quebec's English-speaking minority, but Premier René Lévesque described the practice as "an obsolete tradition." Jean-Noël Lavoie, leader of the Liberal opposition, accused the federal Government of insulting Quebec's minority and called the omission of the Queen's English "a gesture of separatism."

Just before the session opened there was another such gesture. Mr. Lévesque flew to Quebec City from a conference in Ottawa in an official plane and when they were over Montreal the pilot spoke to ground-control in French.

An English-speaking pilot on a nearby commercial flight lodged an official complaint, thus refueling the controversy that has raged in Canada since French-speaking pilots demanded the right to use French instead of English, which is almost universally used.

Quebec Would Back Pilot

The right has been granted for small Quebec airports, but not for Montreal. Mr. Lévesque, however, said his government would back the pilot in any court case.

The two incidents gave a flavor of things to come, which was subsequently spelled out a bit more when the Premier renounced a revision of the Language Act. Controversy over this act helped to defeat the previous Liberal government.

Camille Laurin, the Minister for Cultural Development, was given until Feb. 15 to propose revisions that would make French "a useful, profitable and necessary language for all Quebecers."

Jacques-Yves Morin, the Minister of Education, told the Assembly that "in our view, all spheres of Quebec life must be made French—work, public administration, business, the professions and communications."

The previous government, which in putting through the act was accused of separatist tendencies, had a particular problem with recent immigrants. Most of them sought to send their children to English schools, since English was considered by them to be the language that afforded the greatest economic opportunities in Quebec and in North America as a whole.

The present government has the same problem, but Mr. Morin said the choice of the school language would depend on how widely French came to be used in daily and professional life. "If daily living is carried on in French, then citizens will quite naturally send their children to French schools," he said.

The English-speaking minority has long dominated business life in Montreal and the effect has been to make most French-speaking people, working in subordinate positions, bilingual out of necessity. English schools will continue, but only those Quebecers whose maternal tongue is English will be allowed to send their children to them.

However, increased pressure is expected to be brought to bear on the English Canadians here to learn French.

All future immigrants will be obliged to attend French schools, including those from English-speaking countries such as Britain and the former British colonies in the Caribbean. Immigrants would be informed of these requirements while still in their countries of origin.

The expectation is that the majority would go to English-speaking cities such as Toronto, rather than to Montreal.

lems and added that the positions taken on human rights and economic issues would undoubtedly have implications for administration policy in other parts of the world.

The commission chairman, Sol M. Linowitz, a Washington lawyer and former United States delegate to the Organization of American States, on Tuesday presented a draft copy of the report to Cyrus R. Vance, the designated Secretary of State for Mr. Carter. The final report will be officially released Monday.

Mr. Linowitz, a Democrat, has also conferred recently on Latin American policy with Mr. Carter and with Zbigniew Brzezinski, who has been designated special assistant for national security affairs by Mr. Carter.

If the recommendations were accepted it would be a sharp change from the principles of the Monroe Doctrine; it favors treating Latin America in the context of global issues rather than as a region with a special relationship to the United States. The Monroe Doctrine, proclaimed in 1823 by President James Monroe, said the United States would resist European efforts to dominate or colonize Latin American countries.

Opportunities and Dangers

The report, which says that all of its recommendations were not approved unanimously, describes an agenda of Latin America-United States relations as one of "latent opportunities" rather than "hidden dangers." But it makes clear at the outset that the most important point is for the United States to "pledge its full respect for the sovereignty" of each country and a commitment not to inter-

On Panama, the report says the canal is no longer of vital strategic interest to the United States, but that good relations with Latin America depend on swift conclusion of a treaty giving Panama eventual sovereignty over the waterway.

It says the new administration should promptly negotiate a pact replacing the 1903 Panama Canal Treaty under which the United States runs the canal and the 533 square-mile Canal Zone.

On human rights, the report says the Ford Administration, while more vigorous in dealing with humanitarian problems in the hemisphere, was still lagging with regard to Chile and Brazil in particular. It recommends that limits be placed on arms sales to Latin American countries found to have abused human rights. Economic aid to such countries should be limited to assistance to the needy, the report said.

Urges an End to Dispute With Cuba

On Cuba, the report notes a continuing hostility between Havana and Washington but "reaffirms its judgment that the basic interests of both the U.S. and Cuba would be well served by moving to end their long estrangement."

It says Mr. Carter should pave the way for normalizing relations with Cuba by declaring an antiterrorist policy to deal with elements in this country opposed to President Fidel Castro and by lifting the 16-year-old American embargo.

In return it recommends that Cuba release political prisoners, order its 15,000 troops in Angola not to intervene "anywhere," and that Cuba respect the political sanctity of Puerto Rico.

On transfers of arms, the commission notes that the United States remains the largest supplier of weapons to Latin America and urges this country not to compete with other suppliers. It recommends new limitations on arms in the hemisphere as well as new restraints on the spread of nuclear weapons-making capabilities.

Also Deals With Economic Issues

The report deals at length with economic issues and says the United States should differentiate between Latin American countries with growing economies—like Brazil and Mexico—and the poor lands of the region.

The recommendations include bigger capital funds for development loans in the World Bank and Inter-American Development Bank, credits for handling debts for oil purchases, debts, reduction or elimination of tariffs, generosity on Latin American commodity prices and creation of new trade incentives.

It says the United States should deal with relatively prosperous countries by encouraging their investment potential and with the relatively poor and very poor countries through "concessional assistance."

"Our purpose is not to divide Latin America from the developing world but to close the gap that separates us from the region as well as from the developing world," it states. The report also calls on Latin American countries to exercise economic discipline and suggests incentives for those who do so.

The 20-member commission includes W. Michael Blumenthal, who is chairman of the Bendix Corporation and who has been designated to be Mr. Carter's Secretary of Treasury.

Other members considered to be possible office holders in the Carter administration are: Richard N. Gardner, a Columbia University professor of law; Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of the University of Notre Dame; Samuel T. Huntington, professor of government at Harvard; Arturo Morales-Carrión, president of the University of Puerto Rico; Clifton R. Wharton Jr., president of Michigan State University; and Robert A. Pastor, a Harvard teaching fellow who directed the commission staff.

New Mexico on the Losing Side

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI)—New Mexico lost its distinction this year as the only state that has always voted for the winner in a Presidential election. In the Nov. 2 general election, New Mexicans supported President Ford over Jimmy Carter by a vote of 207,869 to 199,653.

Missouri Deer Hunters Double

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (UPI)—According to the Missouri Conservation Commission, there were 120,000 firearms deer hunters in 1965 and nearly double that 10 years later. Bird-watching, canoeing and camping all increased by more than 200 percent.

Fiat Chairman Under Criticism For Libya Deal

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

ROME, Dec. 18—Giovanni Agnelli, who is one of Italy's best-known personalities and runs its most famous company, is once again dominating the headlines, the covers of the weekly picture magazines and the conversation here.

The Italian press has never needed much of an excuse to focus on Mr. Agnelli, whose face on a magazine cover usually guarantees a good sale. But now there is a reason, for he has stirred controversy with the decision to allow Libya to take a 10 percent holding in Fiat, the giant automobile company.

Mr. Agnelli, the chairman of Fiat, which was founded by his grandfather more than 75 years ago, is under some pressure to explain the transaction. It would be the first major Arab investment in Italy and the most important of its kind for Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi, the Libyan leader.

Contrasting Personalities

The contrast between the two men, who met for the first time the other day in Moscow, is stark.

Mr. Agnelli, 55 years old, is a suave, elegant figure who has friends in high places just about everywhere, in the Soviet Union as well as the United States, among Democrats and Republicans in Washington, among Italian politicians of various leanings. Colonel Qaddafi is a tough, sometimes crude Arab leader who is often blamed for inspiring international terrorism.

Mr. Agnelli is finding it necessary to try to calm fears about the Arab investment and to explain how a highly regarded company such as Fiat could do business with a controversial and erratic figure such as the Libyan.

"My hope is that Libya's image will improve," Mr. Agnelli said in an interview in his luxurious Rome apartment. "I also hope that such investments will help Libya out of its isolation."

Recycling of Petrodollars

"The only offer for investment in Fiat came from Libya," he said. "And in my view, the recycling of petrodollars from the oil-producing states through investment in European business is useful. It is certainly better than having Libya use its money for other purposes."

Mr. Agnelli, from whose penthouse apartment one can see all of Rome, stressed that the Libyans had demanded no political price in the transaction, which yielded Fiat $415 million. And he did not appear to be worried that one day Libya might try to take control of the company.

"It would be impossible for Libya to gain a controlling interest," he said. "The family's interest, coupled with the stock of our friends, comes close to 50 percent. And if Libya did try to overcome that and take control, I'm sure Italy would pass some laws to prevent it."

The Agnelli family now controls about 30 percent of Fiat through a holding company, which was not involved in the Libyan transaction. This holding company controls such diverse enterprises as Cinzano vermouth and Bantam Books in the United States.

Reassures U.S. Jews

Mr. Agnelli, who was seated on a white sofa set against a background of modern paintings, sought to reassure Italians, business partners elsewhere and the American Jewish community. Fiat sells about 100,000 cars a year in the United States.

"I am concerned about the judgment of such an influential and important group as the Jewish community in America," he said. "But I believe that when they examine the facts, they will find no reason to worry. The question of our business with Israel never came up. Neither did the question of the Jewish member of our board of directors."

Fiat officials said that the Jewish member of the board was Simon Aldewereld, who represents the international banking company of Lazard Freres. La Stampa, the Turin newspaper owned by Fiat, is also run by a Jewish editor, Arrigo Levi, whose resignation was once unsuccessfully demanded by Libya for a satirical article that displeased Colonel Qaddafi.

The Libyan Arab Foreign Bank, which conducted the 18 months of negotiations with Fiat, will hold two of the 15 seats on the company's board of directors and one of the five seats on the executive committee. Fiat officials said that the Libyans could easily be outvoted if they sought to influence the company politically.

It Could Have Been Worse

Mr. Agnelli said that even though the Libyan connection has raised some questions, there would have been a stronger reaction in Italy if Fiat had become partners with Iran, which has been investing in Europe, or even if there had been a deal with the United States. He noted that there was much anti-Iran sentiment in Italy and that an investment by a large American company would have been viewed as a danger to national sovereignty by a large segment of Italian public opinion.

"Investment from the United States would have been even more acceptable to me personally than from Iran," he said. "The Americans would have provided not only capital but also technology, know-how and commercial experience. Unfortunately it would have provoked more negative reactions than the Libyan investment."

"Personally, I wish Fiat could have bought 10 percent of the oil wells in Libya," Mr. Agnelli added. "But we have to do what we can. This was a good financial arrangement for Fiat and for Libya."

Mr. Agnelli insisted that the sale of the stock to Libya did not mark the beginning of the end of the Agnelli family's influence in Italy, where the Communist Party has been rising in power. He said that the Agnellis plan to continue their corporate operations despite his apprehensions over the future.

U.M.W. IS EMBROILED IN BITTER VOTE FIGHT

Miller, Reformer Who Beat Boyle
4 Years Ago, Is Now Target in a Similar Campaign

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 18—Four years after it generated one of the most remarkable rank-and-file upheavals in American labor history to end half a century of autocratic rule, the United Mine Workers is embroiled in the same atmosphere of fear and reprisal that stirred the rebellion.

Arnold R. Miller, the former coal miner from West Virginia who led the union politically inexperienced insurgents to a upset election victory over W. A. Boyle in December 1972, now faces a re-elected struggle of his own.

The contest seems dismayingly familiar to many in the union, with angry charges that Mr. Miller is grasping at appointive and financial levers available only to the incumbent to woo a constituency in the coal fields that has been demonstrative toward him the same doubt, if not contempt and hostility, that it showed in ousting Mr. Boyle.

Mr. Miller is being challenged for the union presidency by Lee Roy Patterson, a Boyle loyalist, who is the union's executive board member from the Western Kentucky District. But the anti-Boyle forces may be divided by the possible candidacy of Harry Patrick, the 46-year-old union secretary-treasurer, who was elected with Mr. Miller in 1972 but is now bitterly estranged from the president.

The campaign for the election, on Jan. 14, began here this weekend. And all the ugliness at a meeting of the 24-man international executive board that recessed here today were for maximum turnout, minimum attention to administrative affairs and the possible return to power next year of Boyle loyalists.

Important Negotiations Due in Fall

With important contract negotiations due next fall in the coal industry, the leaders of the warring factions said this the 87-year-old union has rarely, if ever, been in such disarray.

There was wide agreement that in large measure, the turmoil has arisen because Mr. Miller, who is 53 years old, has not only lost a grip on day-to-day union affairs but is reacting to challenges in what many describe as a paranoid fashion.

"Paranoid" is a new word to many of the poorly educated rank-and-file coal miners who have risen to prominence in the union in the last four years. But it is used so often now, and so openly, to describe the embattled Mr. Miller that he has confronted the charge publicly, saying: "A lot of people say I am paranoid because it's the only issue they can find against me—a smokescreen."

The changes against Mr. Miller, constitute "a disturbing and frightening trend," as one former ally of the president put it.

Miller Cites 'Loss of Respect'

A major problem cited is the falling away, through what Mr. Miller himself attributed to a "loss of respect" for him, of nearly every close personal ally of his 1972 campaign.

First, a year ago, there was a series of key staff reassignment and resignations, with charges by those departing that Mr. Miller was "incompetent, inattentive and unpredictable." There followed a number of suspensions by Mr. Miller of fellow union officers, which were quickly overturned by the union's executive board. And lately, there have been dismissals for what Mr. Miller has called "disloyalty" and "insubordination." The dismissals had been labeled "arbitrary" and "antiumion" by the union staff, Mr. Miller says he is simply asserting his control.

In the last year, some 15 of the 60 officials at the union's Washington headquarters have been dismissed or have resigned.

And there is the prospect, according to Mr. Miller, of still more dismissals, even though a recent dismissal, that of Eddie Bushe, the president's former top administrative assistant, was overturned on appeal at the board meeting here.

The vote was the latest of a long series of international executive board rebuffs. Another controversial dismissal, following a tumultuous union convention in Cincinnati, was that of Bernard Aronson, a 30-year-old former antipoverty worker and newspaper reporter who had been with Mr. Miller since the 1972 campaign. He was the union's press secretary.

President Takes Press Queries

Mr. Aronson, who Mr. Miller said he suspected of "making me look bad and somebody else look good" in speeches and press statements, has not been replaced. Under a new Miller order, all press inquiries received at the union headquarters are to be referred directly to the president's office.

Cited as further evidence of deep rancor at union headquarters is Mr. Miller's contention that his personal secretary, a woman of no known factional political leanings, can no longer be trusted because "she has become part of the game plan to plague me with these internecine frictions so that I can't take care of my responsibilities to the membership."

The secretary, Karen Fizer, is believed by Mr. Miller to have joined in a fund to finance the defense and reinstatement of Mr. Burke and Mr. Aronson and other union employees. For a time, the door to Miss Fizer's office, adjoining Mr. Miller's, was removed from its hinges so that her visitors could be observed. Mr. Miller said this was done in his absence by his administrative assistant, Sam Church, and that he has had the door rehinged.

Union infighting has even reached the physical stage. Mr. Church, who is expected to be Mr. Miller's running mate this year, has been charged in a warrant with assault and battery by Rick Bank, Mr. Miller's one-time administrative assistant, as a result of a punching incident on Dec. 9 at union headquarters. Some have charged that the incident had Mr. Miller's prior approval.

Mr. Miller has made no apologies for the episode, saying only that he should have dismissed Mr. Bank, a lawyer, "a long time ago" for "chilling me a pussy cat" during the 1974 bargaining with the coal industry.

The punching incident took place on the day of publication of a newspaper report that was critical of Mr. Miller's handling of his expense account.

UNCERTAINTY DELAYS BOLLES MURDER TRIAL

City Said to Jeopardize Case
Slain - Arizona - Reporter

By ROBERT LINDSEY

Special to The New York Times

ENID, Dec. 18—Once again, a date is scheduled for the trial of a man charged with murdering Don Bolles, the newspaper reporter, but once there is uncertainty over when the trial will begin.

Recovery continues, meanwhile, over the case of Arizona's Governor, Raul Castro. And a group of out-of-town journalists who have vowed to see the work of Mr. Bolles, an investigative reporter for The Arizona Republic, said to be digging deeply into crime and political corruption in the state.

Bolles died June 13, 11 days after his car exploded under his car. Detectives that John Harvey Adamson, an old racing dog owner, lured Mr. Bolles to a hotel with the promise of a tip. Mr. Adamson has been charged with the murder.

Over the days, the detectives have maintained since the day of the bombing that investigation would lead to other connections, including some with important political connections.

Trial Moved to Tucson

Weeks ago, a Superior Court judge ordered that Mr. Adamson's trial be moved to Tucson, in southern Arizona, because of the publicity over the case.

Prosecution and defense lawyers agreed publicity had jeopardized Mr. Adamson's right to a fair trial. Judge Ben C. Williams of Superior Court in Tucson then ordered the trial to start there on Monday.

Within a few hours, he had postponed the trial to Wednesday, because Adamson's lawyers charged that publicity over the case had also been extensive in Tucson. The lawyers are seeking the trial moved to a rural Arizona town and it now appears that jury selection may not start before Dec. 27.

Mr. Castro became involved in the case because he signed an order that transferred jurisdiction from Donald Harrell, prosecutor, to the state Attorney General's office, and because the line of his largest campaign contribution has been raised in the investigation.

Attorney General's office said that it asked the Governor to transfer the case because, it contended, Mr. Harris made public statements that might jeopardize chances of a conviction.

Rich Landowner Questioned

A contributor is Kemper Marley, an rancher and businessman, and one of the state's richest and biggest landowners. Kemper lost a seat on the state's commission last spring, largely because Mr. Bolles had published certain information about his past.

Mr. Marley, a contractor and a close friend of Mr. Marley, admitted passing money to finance Mr. Adamson's defense. Mr. Marley has been questioned by the police and never been formally described as a suspect.

Mr. Marley, his name, as well as the name of his firm, appeared in a court motion recently by Mr. Adamson's lawyers, an unsuccessful effort to overturn jurisdiction to the Arizona State Supreme Court. The lawyers reportedly had proposed a plea-bargaining arrangement from Harris under which the suspect would provide information about the plan accepted by Mr. Harris but down by the state.

Under their motion, the defense lawyers asked that Mr. Marley be named as a co-defendant, a person who, according to police reports, may also be suspected of aiding and abetting, but a principal involved with the homicide.

Kemper Marley is reported to be a friend of Governor Castro's and is said to have contributed in the neighborhood of $19,000 to the election campaign of the Governor, the motion said. It indicates, the defense lawyers assert, that the government "may have a conflict of interest" in the prosecution of anyone charged with the murder of Mr. Bolles.

20 Journalists Investigating

However, the defense failed in its effort to have Mr. Castro testify on his motive for transferring the case to the jurisdiction of Bruce Babbitt, the state Attorney General, and the case remains in the hands of state prosecutors.

The slaying of Mr. Bolles prompted a unique investigation of crime and corruption in Arizona by more than 20 journalists from almost as many newspapers throughout the country, through an organization called the Investigative Reporters and Editors Association. They are working under the direction of Robert Weis, an editor of Newsday, the Long Island newspaper.

Journalists have maintained a silence about their findings, which they plan to publish in a series of articles in January and February. Sources familiar with their investigation, however, say the reporters are finding evidence of a wide variety of activities in the state.

For example, the reporters are said to have implicated the brother of one of the state's best-known political leaders, as well as a powerful Phoenix businessman, in a number of illegal activities, in some cases in collusion with Mafia associates.

Their investigation is also reported to have found official misconduct in drug and land and securities fraud, as well as evidence that organized crime operates over a Phoenix bank, large agricultural holdings in the state, a chain of restaurants and other businesses.

It's amazing what they have uncovered, one person familiar with part of the investigation said. "They are going to shake up the state like it's never been before."

Labor Is Expected to Seek Only Moderate Wage Increases Under Contracts for Nearly 5 Million

By DAMON STETSON

In next year's labor negotiations unions representing nearly 5,000,000 workers in some of the nation's biggest industries seem likely to stress greater job security and to seek only moderate pay increases if inflation does not flare up again.

The incoming administration of President-elect Carter is committed to reducing unemployment and slowing further the rate of inflation. But success in these areas can hardly come soon enough to change labor's emphasis on job and pay issues. Employers, on the other hand, are expected to continue efforts to try to keep labor costs under control and to improve productivity.

"Unemployment made job security the hot bargaining issue of 1976," James F. Searce, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, said, "and it will no doubt continue to be in 1977. Inflation has made preservation of purchasing power a close second."

Industries in which major contracts expire next year include oil, steel, aluminum, construction, clothing, telephones, shipping, coal and railroads.

Wage increases in contracts negotiated in the first nine months of this year averaged 8.9 percent for the first contract year and 7.0 percent annually over the life of the agreements, according to the United States Department of Labor. In 1975, the rates of increases were 10.2 percent (first year) and 7.8 percent (over the life). The figures did not include gains under cost-of-living clauses.

Rate of Inflation

The rate of inflation has slowed this year, with the Consumer Price Index in October 7.6 percent above a year earlier. Before that, the double-digit inflation reached a peak in December 1975, when the index was 12.2 percent higher than a year earlier.

Even so, Glenn Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America, commented, "I can't imagine a union settling without a cost of living clause unless they're coming back in 12 months."

Contracts containing cost-of-living clauses now cover six million or 60 per cent of all workers under collective bargaining contracts. And most of those unions including The Communications Workers that will have major negotiations next year are among those with such clauses.

When the rate of inflation slows unions with escalator clauses tend to negotiate a lower rate of pay increases, according to W. J. Usery Jr., Secretary of Labor. He is predicting settlements in 1977 in the vicinity of 8 percent.

The busiest bargaining period next year will be between March and September when steel, aluminum, construction, clothing, telephone and shipping contracts are scheduled to be negotiated. But the most critical period may be at year's end when the coal industry contracts expire. The United Mine Workers union is fractionally split and, before the bargaining, must go through a bitter election campaign that will probably make a peaceful settlement more difficult.

Election a Factor in Steel

5. The United Steelworkers of America is also embroiled in a heated election contest between Lloyd McBride, who has the support of the union's retiring president, Bill W. Abel, and Edward Sadowski, a 38-year-old insurgent from Chicago.

But these negotiations will be conducted under the terms of the Experimental Negotiating Agreement of 1974 that requires issues not resolved by April 20 to be submitted to arbitration even though the contract runs until Aug. 1.

However, Mr. Sadlowski has been critical of the no-strike experimental agreement while Mr. McBride, calling it a success in 1974, says that does not mean it will be renewed in 1975. Such a decision would end the bitter faction battle and ease the concern among industry leaders who will be facing steel union negotiators in Washington on Feb. 14.

The union's Wage Policy Committee has already specified broad goals for the year's bargaining in the steel, aluminum and can industries. A major objective, lifetime security with a guaranteed annual wage, is coupled with demands for "substantial" wage increases and improved cost-of-living adjustment provisions.

Job Security Seems Paramount

The Bell System contracts with the Communications Workers, which cover nearly 700,000 employees, expire Aug. 6. Here also the union appears to be focusing on job security as well as economic issues.

"I find the subject of job security keenly in the minds of the members of my union," Mr. Watts, the head of the C.W.A., said in discussing 1977 bargaining at Automation House the other day.

"There is a great feeling of need for security rising among workers whose age is lower than that of those who had the experience of the great Depression," he said.

In the oil industry, where the first major contracts of 1977 expire on Jan. 7, the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union is emphasizing its determination to gain a sizable wage increase. But Al Grosspiron, president, also expresses concern over what is happening to jobs and notes that large production units are operated by fewer workers today than in the past.

"Twenty some years ago, the oil industry employed about 135,000 refinery workers," he said. "Today, only about 90,000 workers are employed in refineries, and they produce more than twice the amount of petroleum products as their counterparts of the 1950s."

U.S. Steel Is Laying Off 6,100

GARY, Ind., Dec. 18 (UPI)—The United States Steel Company has announced a series of temporary layoffs including some 6,100 workers at the company's Gary Works in the next two weeks. A spokesman workers would be laid off beginning tomorrow and 1,167 more in the following week. He attributed the cutbacks to the usual year-end drop of demand for steel and maintenance work on blast furnaces.

POLLUTION IS TERMED LONG-RUN CHALLENGE

Train, E.P.A. Head, Cities Gains in His Tenure but Sees a Wide Array of Problems Remaining

By GLADWIN HILL

WASHINGTON—While the nation is making good progress in reducing pollution, the Carter administration faces a formidable array of environmental problems, according to the man who has had direct responsibility for grappling with them.

"The hardest part of the job still lies ahead," Russell E. Train, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, said last week.

He cited as examples the reduction of automobile smog, which he thinks may require a different kind of car propulsion; the problem of storm water runoff, urban and rural, which looms as a big obstacle in cleaning up the nation's waterways; the task of screening hundreds of thousands of existing chemical compounds for cancer-causing and other harmful properties, and a need for an international organization with power to mitigate global environmental threats.

Leaving Jan. 20

Mr. Train, 56 years old, a Republican who was appointed by President Nixon to direct the nation's largest regulatory agency, is submitting his resignation effective Jan. 20 and is expected to be replaced at the seven-year-old agency. There have been no indications who might succeed Mr. Train.

In an interview reviewing his three-and-a-half-year administration, Mr. Train commented: "With the passage in this last session of Congress of toxic substances control and an expanded solid waste act, we have completed the statutory framework for pollution control. But there are still a lot of problems to be solved in implementing the laws."

Prominent among these problems, he said, is a "critical" shortage in the agency of personnel and money to carry out its many duties.

The agency now has 9,500 personnel, and needs, he said, from 1,000 to 1,500 more. In addition, he said, it needs an increase of about 50 percent in its current $773 million budget to implement the toxic substances law and handle new phases of air and water pollution abatement.

Sewage Grants Used Up

This year brought exhaustion of the original $18 billion in sewage plant assistance grants to communities appropriated by Congress in 1972. Mr. Train has proposed continuance of the program at the rate of $5 billion a year for 10 more years.

Even such an extension would not do much about controlling pollution-laden urban storm water volume, agricultural runoff and forest erosion—problems that are increasing in importance as specific sources of pollution are brought under control. How to manage these, and how to pay for doing it, are big questions. Cost estimates run as high as $100 billion.

Mr. Train acknowledged that while the nation's air and water were becoming "measurably cleaner," alleviation of auto smog had run into many problems that had not been surmounted.

These range from maintenance of efficiency in equipment to control auto fumes to public resistance to urban "transportation management" plans aimed at reducing travel by private car.

"The auto industry has come a long way since 1970 (when the Clean Air Act was passed) in recognizing its responsibility to clean up," he commented. "But it still obviously isn't going to do anything it isn't forced to by legislation and enforcement activity."

A Possible Solution

"Ultimately I think the answer is going to have to be a combination of smaller cars and new technology, with alternative power systems that are substantially less polluting."

The results of the agency's efforts to introduce, through state agencies, various urban transportation management tactics have, he admitted, "been a pretty mixed picture, with a lot of resistance."

"In a place like Houston," he remarked, "you have a commitment to economic development that tends to want no accommodation to environmental problems."

"In New York, with all their financial problems, there's a natural reluctance to make tough decisions on introducing person-transportation disincentives like special bridge and tunnel tolls."

Agency's Work Assessed

The administrator told an annual E.P.A. staff meeting last week that while the agency had been through "some rather rough and wrenching experiences," he felt it had "demonstrated its effectiveness" as an instrument for administering environmental laws. He said that he was gratified that "the basic strength of these laws remains unimpaired" and that environmental "remains a matter of highest national priority."

The "rough experiences" are known to have included contention with the White House, the Office of Management and Budget, and such agencies as the Commerce and Treasury Departments, as well as powerful segments of industry.

However, Mr. Train said in the interview that he wanted to avoid recriminations and criticism as unproductive, because he felt that the E.P.A. had received more support from the executive branch than might have been expected.

He did suggest, however, that the failure to make energy conservation the prime aspect of energy policy had represented "a disastrous failure of the national will."

International Problems Cited

He also said the United Nations Law of the Sea conference had been disappointing, inconclusive, and that such international problems as ocean pollution and protection of the earth's ozone layer called for "international institutions which when necessary can set standards and enforce them."

The agency has spent millions to develop citizen participation in its regulatory programs as envisioned in environmental laws, but there has been criticism that there is still a high level of citizen detachment.

Mr. Train contends, however, that "the environmental protection effort has significantly raised the level of citizen participation in government generally."

Andrus Built Reputation on Environmental and Land-Use Star

Special to The New York Times
BOISE, Idaho, Dec. 18—President-elect Jimmy Carter's choice for Secretary of the Interior is probably best known to most Americans as the man who promotes Idaho potatoes in television commercials.
But Gov. Cecil D. Andrus, whose ads brought him fan letters from around the country, is best known at home as the moderate Democrat who broke the Republicans' 24-year grip on the governorship in 1970 in one of the most conservative states in the Union.

Governor Andrus, who won re-election in 1974 with 71 percent of the vote, is an anomaly in more ways than political affiliation. In a region that is often pro-development and pro-business, his reputation has been built on strong environmental stands and his advocacy of land-use planning.

Asked recently if he wanted the Interior Secretary's job, Governor Andrus, who is 45 years old, replied, "If not me, I hope a Cecil Andrus [type] is appointed."

He originally won the Governor's job, beating the incumbent Republican, Don Samuelson, on the strength of his opposition to a molybdenum mine in the scenic White Clouds Mountain. This year he won much applause from conservationists by testifying before the Idaho Public Utilities Commission against a new 1,000-megawatt electric generating plant near Boise. His testimony, in which he said that the plant would turn on the "growth switch," is credited with killing the plant.

The one action that lost him the support of some environmentalists was his backing of the building of the Teton Dam in southeast Idaho, which collapsed last June. Now, he says it should be rebuilt only if the people in the region want it.

Like President-elect Carter, who campaigned for Governor Andrus's re-election in 1974, he is also a fiscal conservative. His first accomplishment as Governor was to wipe out the state debt and maintain a balanced budget. Also like the former Governor of Georgia, he streamlined state government, reducing 268 agencies to 20.

In general, Governor Andrus is regarded as an environmental pragmatist who manages to remain in good standing with both conservation and business interests.

"Industrial growth will only be allowed if industry plays according to Idaho's ground rules and immediately complies 100 percent with environmental regulations," he told one interviewer.

He added that he was not "doggedly against development" but took a "prudent" approach.

Thus, he is popular with Republicans and Democrats alike in a state where the two sides rarely see eye to eye. "A fair man, a reasonable man," said the newly elected Republican majority leader of the State Senate, James A. Risch.

Cecil Dale Andrus, the son of a logger, was born in Hood River, Ore., Aug. 25, 1931. He attended Oregon State University but never obtained a degree.

At 23, he took a job in a sawmill in Orofino, Idaho. Five years later, lured by local Republicans, he ran for the State Senate to spite them and won. After three two-year terms, he ran unsuccessfully for Governor, returned to northern Idaho to sell insurance, then served another term in the legislature before becoming Governor.

At 6 feet 1 inch, Governor Andrus is a rangy, baldish outdoorsy "man's man." He is an avid duck, goose and big-game hunter and fly fisherman as well as a "lousy" golfer, according to a family friend. He smokes two or three packs of cigarettes a day in between bouts with abstinence from smoking.

Governor Andrus, who is married to his high school sweetheart, the former Carol May, has three daughters, Kelly, 16; Tracy, 20; and Tara, 25. In 1975, Tracy was discovered to have Hodgkin's Disease, a form of cancer, but was apparently treated successfully. She has since returned to her studies at Boise State University.

Allies and opponents alike consider Governor Andrus a politically savvy man who can "talk to anybody." He is also noted for remembering not only names and also faces in his sparsely populated state.

When Republicans friends endorsed his opponent in the 1970 election had a large newspaper advertisement prominently displaying the name of all Republican committee chairmen aligned against him, blown up to size.

"Everytime a senator came in office after he was elected aski a favor," recalls one of them, take out the ad and say, 'Let is your name on here?'"

ER CONSIDERING FITTING C.I.A. POST

On the subject, Schlesinger, whom Mr. Carter is now as the secretary of a new department on energy, arrived in Plains today but declined to say whether he has been offered a job in the new position—or on anything at all, for “to enjoy the climate,” he said, “I’m driven away from the grass strip at the local airport to keep his appointment with the President-elect. It was his second visit to this tiny village. His first, last September, made what Mr. Carter called “a profound impression on me,” and in his news conference today the President-elect said that Mr. Schlesinger “is one of those that I am considering to ask to serve in my administration.” In introducing Governor Andrus, Mr. Carter said he had not considered anyone else for the interior post and praised the Governor as a superb manager who had reorganized Idaho’s state government. The Governor, who brought only one business suit with him from Boise because he did not expect that his selection would be announced so quickly after his talks with Mr. Carter yesterday, said he was “excited” to be faced with the “new challenge” and promised a diligent stewardship of the country’s land and resources.

It was the fourth Cabinet appointment Mr. Carter has made since his election nearly seven weeks ago, and with less than a week remaining before his self-imposed deadline for rounding out his Cabinet, the President-elect conceded today that he had been having difficulty finding women willing to serve. At one point today he said he could not “specifically” answer the question of whether there would be a woman in his Cabinet. On Thursday, he had said that there would be. Today, he said, “That would be a very good guess.” In discussing his search, he said there was no doubt that women had been excluded from consideration for Cabinet posts and other significant positions in government in the past.

“And another factor that’s, I think, apparent is that when a woman has become a pre-eminent leader in the business or professional world, she can demand and receive superb salaries,” he said. “In addition to that, quite often a woman who has become prominent becomes a member of the boards of directors of five, six, seven, eight major corporations.” “Each one of those corporations pays stipends of 10 to 20 thousand dollars each,” he said. “So, there’s a tremendous salary level for women who are well known and who serve in major positions, and this has made it difficult for some of them to decide to come into Government.” “Women have a much more difficult time telling the other members of their family that they’re going to move to Washington than do men; and I’ve had several women who have expressed some concern that they would like to serve in the Government, and they just couldn’t split their family and their husband was not willing to move. “So, I’ve done the best I could and still am doing the best I can to get well-qualified women and men, black and white and others, to serve in the Cabinet; and I’m going to make a special additional effort at the Under Secretary, Deputy and Assistant Secretary level to take into the administration those who are now in a process of being trained for a higher position.” In response to other questions in his news conference, the President-elect said that Clarence M. Kelley, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, was still being considered for the same job in the new administration but that the post would eventually be filled, with Mr. Carter’s approval, by the new Attorney General. He said he had no intention of deviating from his campaign promise to issue a general pardon for Vietnam war draft resisters in his first week in the White House. More than 100 Congressmen have signed a letter urging that he reconsider and withhold the pardon.

More Oil Revenue for Caracas

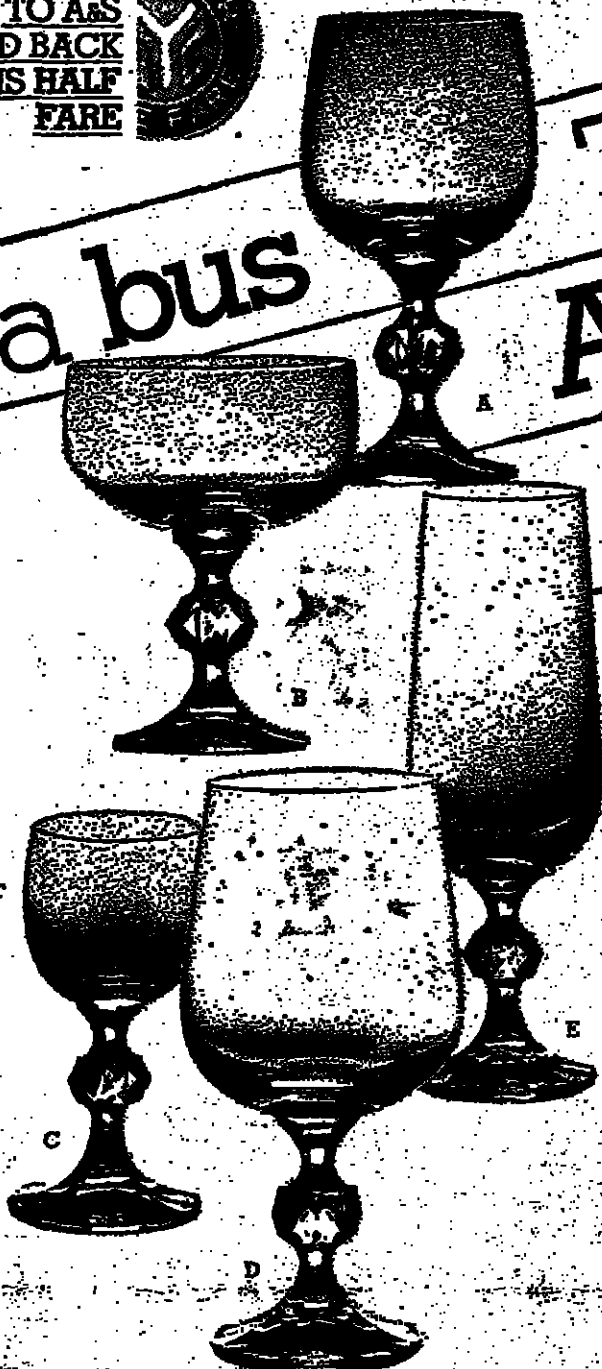

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 18 (Reuters)—Venezuela is likely to earn an extra $900 million in oil revenue in 1977 because of the 10 percent price rise agreed by most members of OPEC, according to initial estimates by government experts today. Venezuela is the world’s fourth biggest oil producer with 2,200,000 barrels a day.

Poll Finds Division on Price Curbs

Forty-four percent of the American public would like the Government to reimpose wage and price controls, according to the latest Gallup poll. Forty-one percent of those questioned said they opposed such controls and 15 percent had no opinion.

The findings reflect a pattern that has been in existence for nearly four decades, according to past surveys. In periods of war and severe inflation, the public has generally been more in favor of controls than not, and in times of prosperity, as a decade ago, opinion was evenly divided.

The current survey found that labor union families and nonunion families were very similar in their views. In both groups 44 percent favored wage-price controls. Among labor union families 43 percent opposed controls and 13 percent had no opinion; 41 percent of the nonunion families opposed them and 15 percent gave no opinion. Considering a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points, the views of these two groups were virtually the same.

The group most in favor of controls were Democrats, 46 percent of whom supported controls, while 37 percent were against them and 15 percent had no view on the issue.

That attitude is in contrast to Democratic President-elect Jimmy Carter's stated intention not to ask Congress for the authority to impose such controls. His advisers have said, however, that he might decide to ask some corporations to give the Government advance notice of price increases as a means of combating inflation.

The recent Gallup survey indicated, nevertheless, that public support for wage-price controls was only slightly less at this time than in August 1974, when the nation was laboring under double-digit inflation. A poll at that time indicated that 50 percent of the public favored controls, 39 percent opposed them and 11 percent had no opinion.

In August 1971, a few weeks before President Nixon imposed wage and price controls, a survey indicated that 50 percent of the public wanted controls, while 39 percent did not. In the following two years, other polls found the public in favor of even stricter controls than the Nixon Administration was using. All controls were lifted on April 30, 1974, and none have been applied since then.

In the latest survey, which was conducted Dec. 3-6 and was based on interviews in person with 1,507 adults, those who were 50 years old and over favored controls by a margin of 46 to 37 percent, with 17 percent undecided. This was the question asked in the poll: "Would you favor or oppose having the Government bring back wage and price controls?"

A 67-year-old cabinetmaker in Towson, Md., said when he was interviewed, "It's rough going for me—since retirement I find my financial burden growing each month." Such is the case for many older and retired Americans whose incomes are more likely to be fixed under Social Security benefits and pension programs.

"We've got to have controls so we can at least slow down the rapid pace we have put ourselves in," said a 33-year-old salesman from Olean, N.Y. "So we can plan the future with a more solid foundation."

BLUMENTHAL SEEKS BACKING OF BUSINESS

the major issues facing the United States, and he expects the Carter administration to follow policies that are more sympathetic than the present administration's, but that are also pragmatic.

Mr. Blumenthal has never personally invested in a tax shelter (although he does own tax-exempt bonds), but he does not see the sense of the present law, which sets a higher maximum tax rate on income from investments than on income from wages or salaries.

Mr. Blumenthal is not exactly sure how to accomplish it, but he believes the tax system should make it neither more nor less advantageous for corporations to operate in foreign countries, rather than in the United States. This option is more advantageous for many multinational companies, though not all.

As for the program that the Carter administration will adopt to stimulate the economy, Mr. Blumenthal said he thought there was a considerably greater divergence of opinion within the business community than was expressed by the 15 business executives who met with President-elect Carter at Blair House a week ago. On that occasion, Reginald Jones, chairman of the General Electric Company, proposed a $23 billion tax-cut and job-creation package, and none of the other executives present spoke against it.

Wants to Consult More

But Mr. Blumenthal said he felt the need to explore, with "a wider cross-section of the business community," their feelings about tax reduction and spending increases and about the total size of any package for an economic stimulus.

What is being discussed in Carter circles has ranged from $15 billion to 20 billion, in tax reduction and job-creating spending programs combined. A package of this size, as has been pointed out by Bert Lance, the director-designate of the Office of Management and Budget, would mean a budget deficit of $75 billion or more.

In talking with business executives about what should be done, Mr. Blumenthal said, "I want to challenge them, not just by getting their standard reaction—the bankers saying, don't fiddle with interest rates, and the businessmen saying, balance the budget—but to challenge them by saying, 'If you were in our place, how would you deal with this problem?'"

He expressed confidence that he could make many business executives see things his way.

When businessmen are looking at their own businesses, the Secretary-designate said, "they look at the facts and they do that very well."

"But when it comes to the broad public questions, many of them begin not to think about fact but just philosophy," he added.

He plans to explain to business executives his own impression of the facts, which is that without any Government program of stimulus to the economy, the unemployment rate could go up to 10 percent or more and there could be new riots in the cities.

These facts will preclude the reaching of certain "philosophical goals," such as a smaller budget deficit, at this time, he said.

He expressed the belief that a consensus could be built in support of whatever economic stimulus program Mr. Carter finally adopts, partly by just such an explanation of the facts.

In addition, he said, it is necessary to "put together a set of policies that take into account the views and needs of as many different sectors as possible."

He noted, for example, that some people have advocated a tax cut that would go almost exclusively to the low-income bracket. But, he said, that would not be the best answer because "it is necessary to build confidence in the business community by doing some of the things they want."

'Compromise Package'

The building of such confidence, he said, would "translate itself into investment decisions and other business decisions" that in themselves would be beneficial to the economy.

He did not specifically mention tax changes that would make investments in new equipment more profitable, but this appeared to be what he meant. Other key aides to Mr. Carter have also endorsed such investment incentives.

In Mr. Blumenthal's view, it is necessary that the program to stimulate the economy be "a compromise package that has something in it for more than one group, even though you could make an ideal economic argument that it all ought to go to one group."

He begged off discussing longer-range tax policy questions in detail on the ground that he was no tax expert.

He mentioned simplification of the tax laws and making them fairer as two desirable goals, while stating that he did not know now how to achieve either one. But he elaborated somewhat on his third objective in the tax area: dealing with the question of how progressive tax rates can be before "they create disincentives to work."

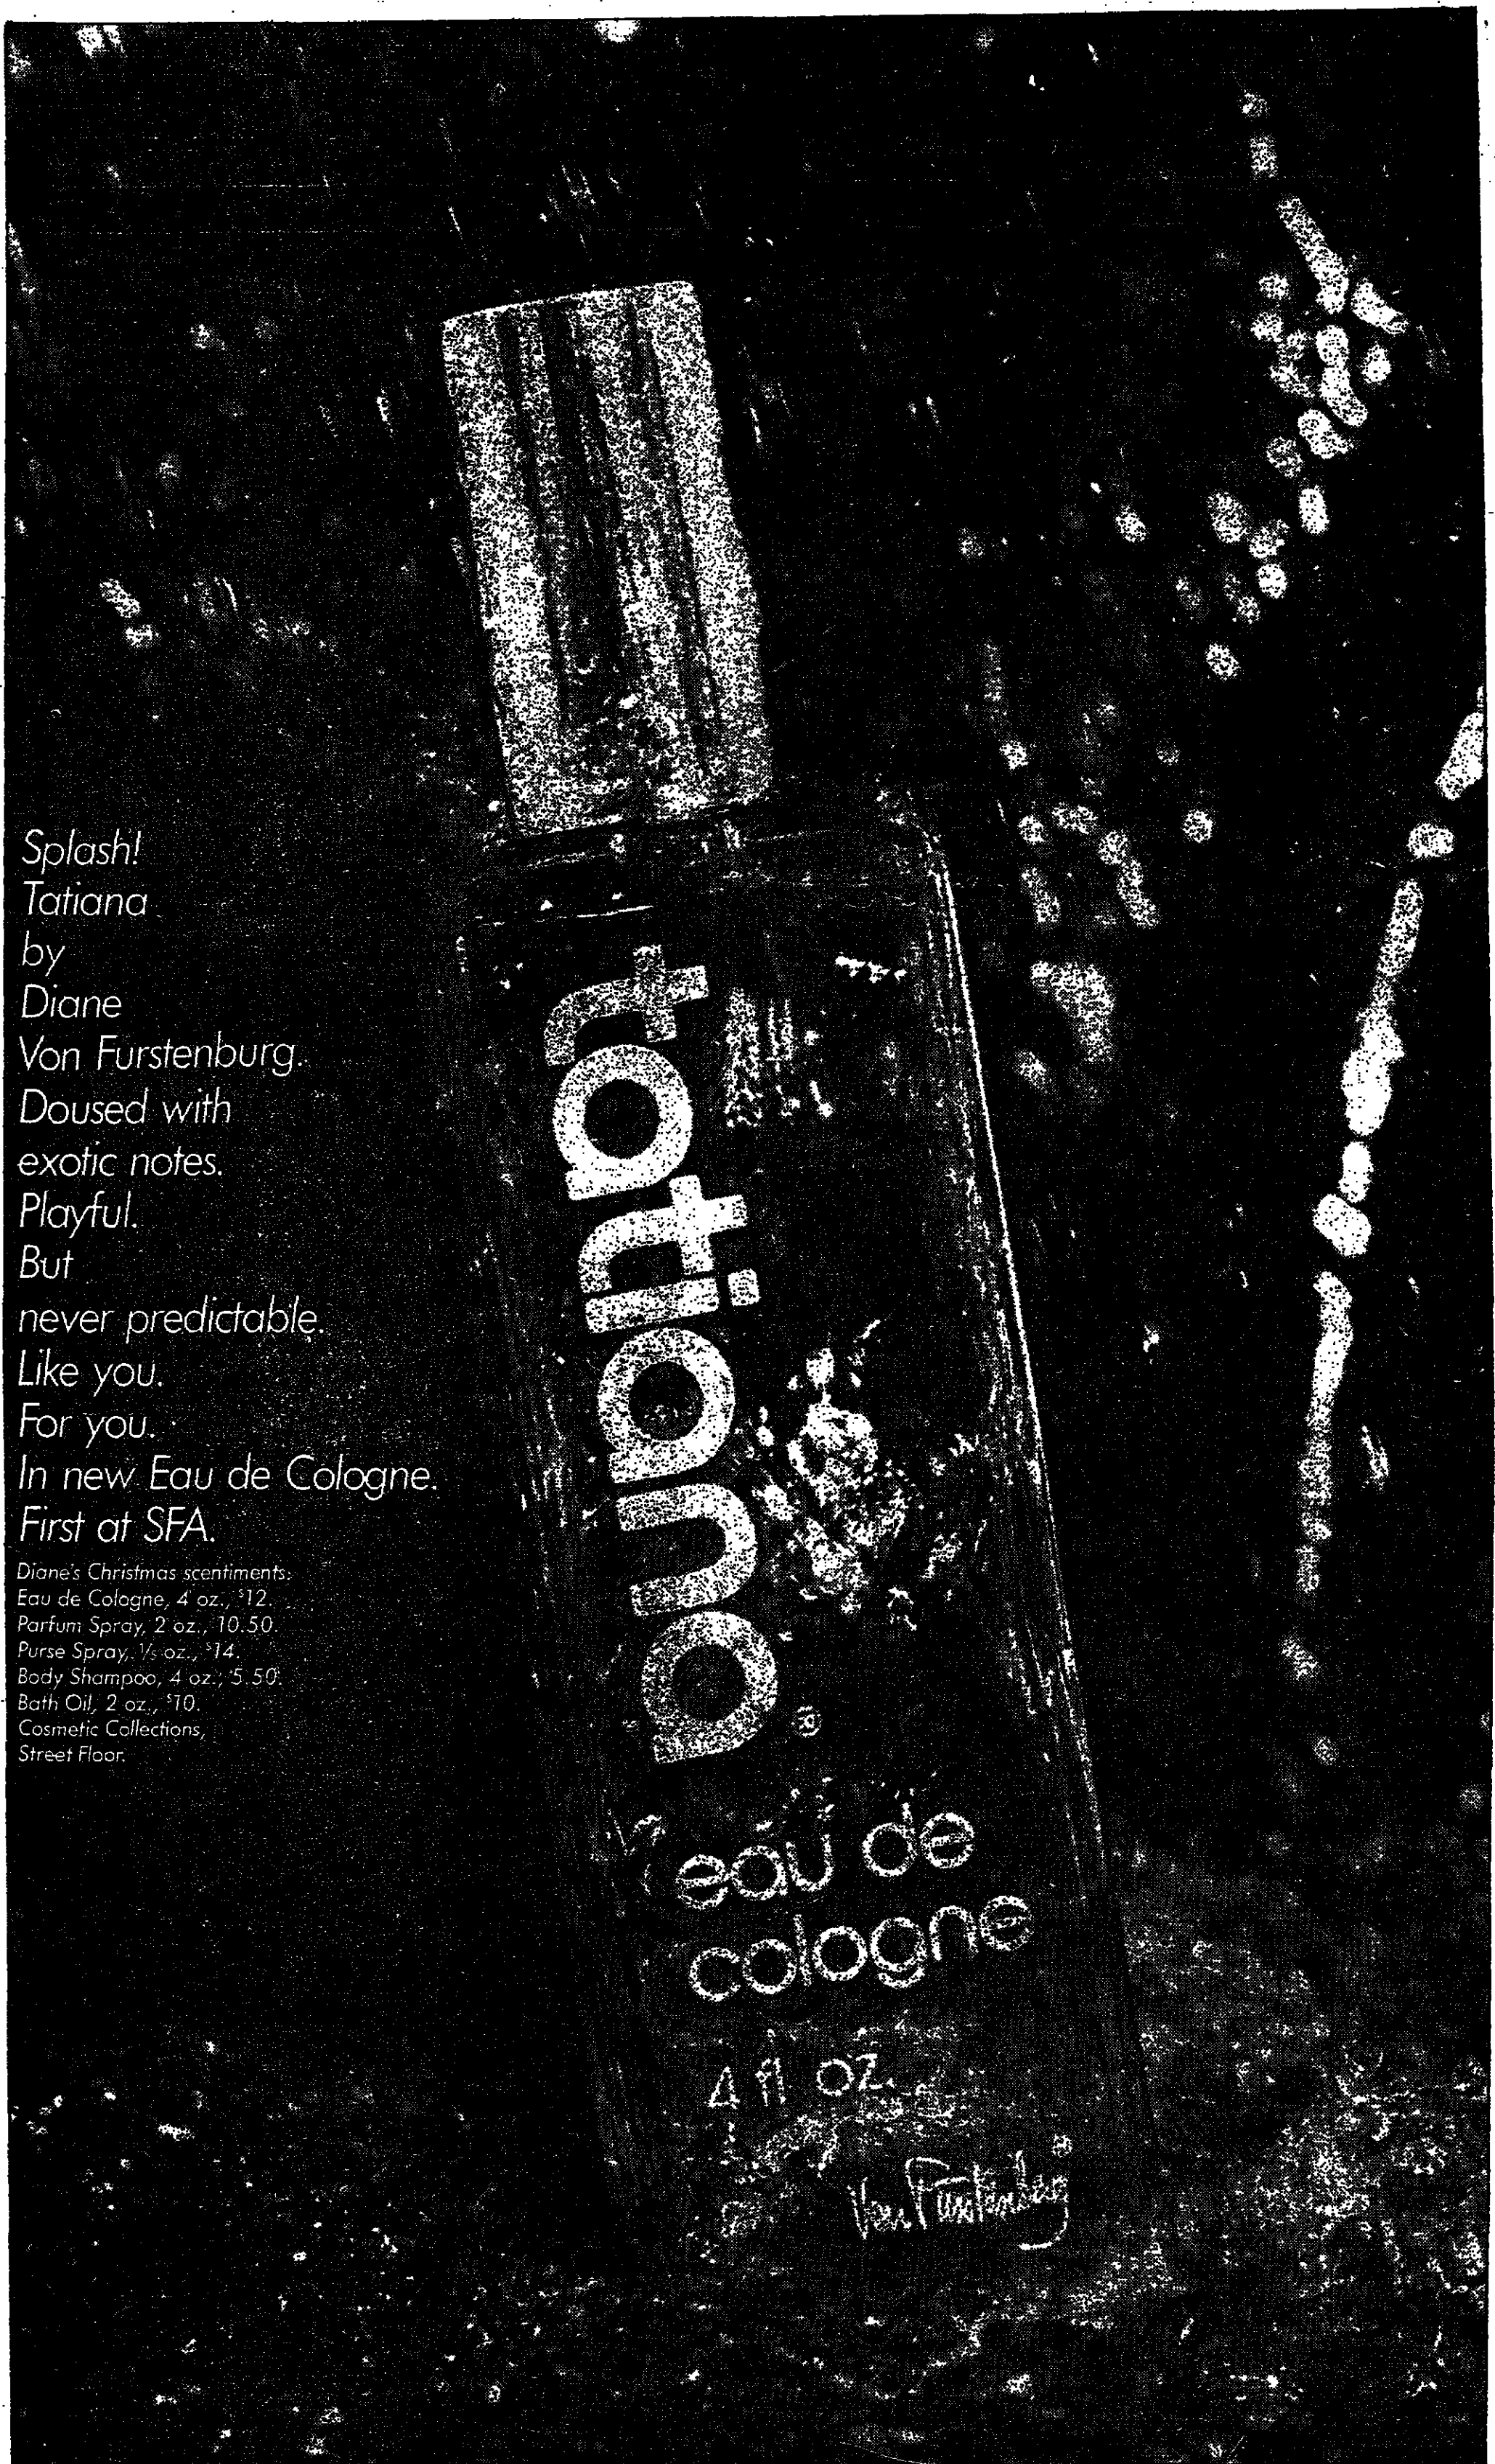

"I don't know what the right rate is," he said. But he added, "I don't quite understand the philosophical basis" for setting a top tax rate of 50 percent on "earned" income from salaries, professional fees and commissions, and a rate of 70 percent on "unearned" dividends and interest.

He said he had never invested in tax shelters because "I really felt badly about trying to reduce my tax bill to the Government when I was earning a lot of money." Besides, he said, "it was my suspicion that most of those tax shelters were really just a way to transfer money from Uncle Sam to some promotion."

As for the economic problems of underdeveloped countries, Mr. Blumenthal said he thought what he would encounter now would be analogous to what he faced when he came into Government service the first time, in 1961. Then, he said, the Government had long taken "a doctrinaire position" that such things as international commodity agreements to stabilize prices were wrong because they interfered with free market forces.

Now, he said, as in 1961, he believes "sympathy will replace the doctrinaire way."

Specifically, he endorsed negotiations looking toward the creation of an international fund, generally called a "common fund," to help stabilize some commodity prices, a position that is directly at variance with the one taken by the present secretary of the Treasury, William E. Brock.

In a Bias Trial, Court Is Told Blacks Do Not Get Fair Chance at Adoption

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

A federal judge presiding at a race-discrimination trial in Manhattan was told last week that many black children eligible for adoption were routinely continued in foster care. "We were told," said Judith Mendell, testifying as an expert witness for the New York Civil Liberties Union, which is bringing the suit, "that at no time would more than 5 percent of black children ever be adopted."

Miss Mendell was a case supervisor for more than three years for a division of the Department of Social Services responsible for monitoring 21,000 children in foster care.

When she first came to work there, she said, she was also told that black families could be found if recruitment was done in black communities—in churches, for instance. But, she added, "this was spoken about but not done."

The New York Civil Liberties Union is suing the city, the state and three child-care agencies in behalf of five black children who have spent from nine to 12 years in foster care. Two brothers, one 12, the other 13, have not seen their natural parents in 12 years.

During the week-long trial, which ended Friday, Marcia R. Lowry, head of the rights union's Children's Rights Project, sought to prove her contention that the children were denied access to adoptive homes because they were black. Judge Edward Weinfeld has reserved decision.

Attorneys for the city, the state and private child-care agencies, denied the charges of discrimination. John Horan, the attorney representing the three of the child-care agencies—Windham Children's Services and Child Care Center, Abbott House and the Sheltering Arms Children's Services, said his clients made a "good faith effort to provide care for the children."

The Basis of Suit

However, the rights union alleges that the children, who are plaintiffs in the suit, were denied their First, Ninth and 14th Amendment rights because permanent homes were not found for them after it became clear that they would not return to their biological parents.

The rights union originally brought the suit early in 1975 as a class action in behalf of "thousands" of children in similar circumstances, but last summer Judge Weinfeld ruled against it and he also ruled against the rights union's contention that there was a constitutional right to a permanent, stable home.

Thus, he narrowed the case to the establishment by evidence that these five specific children were denied permanent homes because of their race.

In reviewing the case histories of the five children Miss Mendell and Eve Smith, head of a child-care agency that specializes in finding homes for "unadoptable" children—LCS Spaulding for Children—testified that they left the five children could have been adopted years ago and that in one case the foster parents of some of the children had asked to adopt them.

Miss Mendell said that inconsistent monitoring of the children cared for by 990 private child-care agencies was a major impediment to placing black children in adoptive homes. "We did not have the information that the agencies moved step by step toward finding a home" for the children.

It was customary she said for her department to review child-care agency reports on the children in foster care every six months. The agencies are private but receive federal, city and state funds to care for children in foster care.

Continued foster care was usually recommended for most black children, she said, and her department went along with the agencies' decisions.

"We knew the chances of black children being adopted were relatively slight," said Miss Mendell. She added that agencies leagely freed children in foster care for adoption if they believed there were homes for them.

Most white children were placed," she said. But because no recruiting was done to find black families, many children were not freed for adoption because there were no homes for them.

In recent years, she said some effort has been made to free and find homes for black children, but a mandatory 18-month review now and a subsidy program to encourage low-income families or foster families to adopt.

Reorganization of Purchase Department Is Urged by Beame Pa

By GLENN FOWLER

A mayoral task force yesterday recommended the reorganization of New York City's Department of Purchase to make it more aggressive in its efforts to save taxpayers' money.

Although the department as it is now operated is "highly price-conscious, the city's procurement policy as a whole does not appear to be particularly cost-effective by current standards of the private sector," the task force reported.

Specifically, the department was criticized for accepting at face value most requests by city agencies for the purchase of goods and services. All an agency need do, the task force said, is cite its approved budget as authority for purchasing a given item.

Instead, the report argued, the Purchase Department should adopt a practice common in private business in which the purchasing agent not only recommends the lowest-cost item on the market but also suggests similar, alternative products that may be suitable.

Nicholas Scoppetta, the Deputy Mayor for Criminal Justice, headed the task force in his ongoing capacity as Commissioner of Investigation. Serving with him were Robert J. Bott, deputy director of the Budget Bureau, and the two officials in direct charge of the city's purchasing apparatus—Municipal Services Administrator John T. Carroll and Purchase Commissioner Robert I. Cohen.

Little Incentive Found

The task force was set up 17 months ago, not as a response to allegations of misfeasance or inefficiency, but as a reappraisal of the purchasing practices of the city—"one of the major consumers in the nation," Mr. Beame noted yesterday.

The Purchase Department buys goods and services for most of the city's agencies, with the notable exceptions of the Boards of Education and Higher Education, the Health and Hospitals Corporation and the Housing and Transit Authority. It is also responsible for salvaging used city property and warehousing supplies and for setting citywide standards and specifications for materials bought. During the 1975-76 fiscal year, it purchased $109 million worth of goods and services.

The report recommended that the Mayor's Management Advisory Board, which is headed by Richard R. Shinn, the president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, review the city's regulations for purchasing, which the task force termed "overly restrictive."

A major factor is that city agencies find little incentive in saving money when making purchases, the report said. If they do effect savings, often on the part of the Purchase Department, expended money does not revert to the agency but goes instead into the general fund. This leads to the practice of agencies ordering items to use up their budget.

Henry Hudson Parkway From 72d to 81st St. to Be Reopened to 6 Lanes

By CHARLES KAISER

The Henry Hudson Parkway between 72d and 81st Streets will be reopened to six lanes of traffic next Tuesday, after a 15-month, $10.67 million reconstruction. "Amen!" said Sally Goodgold, vice chairman of Community Board, in reaction to the announcement yesterday by Mayor Beame and Governor Carey.

Mrs. Goodgold was one leader of the fight to get the highway repaired. Since Highway Department engineers ordered the highway closed on Jan. 23, 1974, tens of thousands of cars have been diverted daily to Riverside Drive, other streets on the West Side, and the Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive.

John McNally, the secretary of West Side Action for Repair Now, a coalition of community groups, recalled yesterday that, when traffic was first diverted from the highway, city officials "literally did and said nothing" about whether they intended to repair it.

The outspoken West side community responded to the city's inaction with a torrent of demonstration, blocking traffic along Riverside Drive, badgering city officials and charging that they were victims of a "conspiracy" to create pressure for an Interstate System highway through Riverside Park.

The "conspiracy" was repeatedly denied, but exactly how or why the highway was permitted to deteriorate to the extent that it became unusable has never been explained to the satisfaction of the protesting residents.

Despite the protests, the stretch of the highway between 72d and 81st Streets remained completely closed for eight months, during which time as many as 40,000 cars used Riverside Drive every day, according to city officials.

In August 1974, the city instituted a system of two reversible lanes (southbound in the morning and northbound in the evening), which has remained in effect ever since.

When the highway is operated northbound, southbound traffic exits at 95th Street. When it is operated southbound, northbound traffic exits at 72d Street and enters again at 79th Street. This system will end Tuesday, when the highway is restored to its original width.

Repair work began in September 1975.

Federal funds paid for 75 percent of the project, and the state paid for the rest.

"It's amazing how long this thing has stretched out," said Mr. McNally, who noted that work on the entrance and exit ramps at West 72d and West 79th Streets had still not been completed, although the job is on schedule and the ramp work supposed to be finished next spring.

Beginning Tuesday, the northbound exit ramp and the southbound entrance ramp will be closed at 72d Street. Traffic officials advised motorists who would normally use these ramps to enter and exit at 79th Street.

"The state did this job extremely well,"

Peanuts Were Slave-Ship Fare

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI)—Peanuts were brought to North America aboard slave ships and were an important food supply for the passengers, according to the Louisiana State University Cooperative Extension Service. First grown in Virginia and North Carolina, they were known as goobers. The name peanut did not come into general use until about 1807.

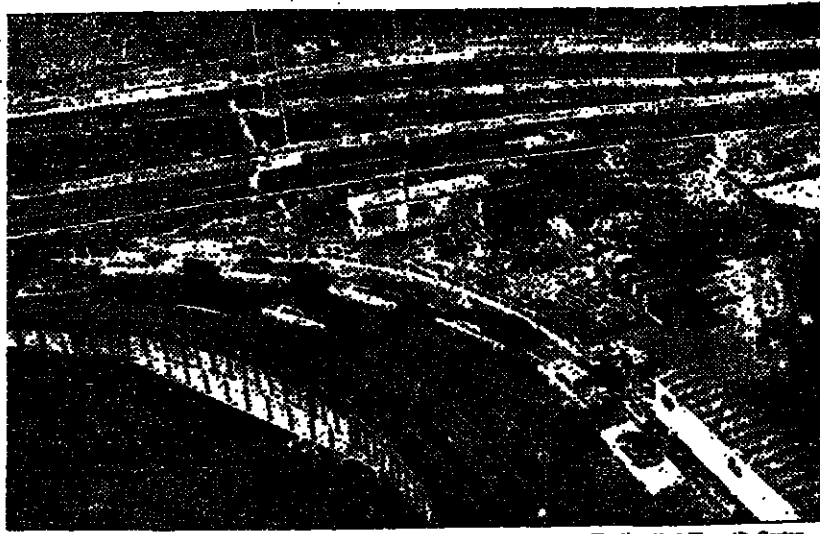

said Mrs. Goodgold, who monitored the project for the community. "They made no incursions into the park, and the few times they had to use it, they handled it like their own backyard—what happens to be the way we think of it."

Mrs. Goodgold will also be monitoring the city's next repair job, which will be one four-block stretch of the highway near the 96th Street interchange. Last week, the Emergency Financial Control Board approved the use of $2.4 million in city funds for the project. Work is scheduled to start next month and is expected to last about 18 months.

When it is completed, a 10-block section with lanes that are already closed to traffic, Mrs. Goodgold said, there will be minimal disruption of traffic.

Two weeks ago, Mayor Beame and Governor Carey announced plans to demolish the elevated part of the West Side Highway between Jane and 26th Streets. The Federal Government will pay 90 percent of the cost, which is estimated at $4 million. The highway is already closed south of 46th Street.

The city wants to build Westway a Southbound lanes of Henry Hudson Parkway, top, have been repaired above 72d Street, and highway will be reopened between 72d and 81st Streets.

$1.156 billion six-lane truck-carrying highway has brought suit with others in Federal Interstate System highway between the District Court in Manhattan to block the Battery and 42d Street. The West Side planned demolition but no decision has Ad Hoc Committee Against the Interstate been announced.

In 1974, Congress amended the Housing Act, giving the Federal Housing Administration the authority to insure mortgages on projects in arrears and faced with foreclosure. The F.H.A. comes into a project, checks its books and physical condition. From that inspection the F.H.A. models calculate backward to determine how big a mortgage the place can carry. If the answer is $10 million, the project carries a mortgage of $9 million. The F.H.A. inspects it and says they will insure it for $6 million. With a mortgage backed by Federal insurance, the city can then go into the regular market and sell the mortgage for $6 million, either to a wealthy individual or a bank.

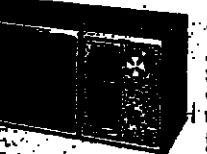

Special Legislation Necessary

Marvin Markus, administrative assistant for government liaison in the Department of Housing and Urban Development, spent six months in Albany helping to get the enabling legislation passed. The state law protects the tenants in Mitchell-Lama projects from having to pay increased rents as a result of the sale. "The only imponderable in this," Mr. Markus said, "is whether."

Attorneys for Cadets Draft New Proposal On Return to Classes

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times

WEST POINT, N. Y., Dec. 17—Lawyers for cadets ousted in the recent cheating scandal at West Point have drafted a plan showing how the cadets can be returned to the academy in time for normal graduation next summer.

A commission headed by Frank Borman, the former astronaut, recommended on Wednesday that the cadets be restored

"as soon as possible." Army Secretary Martin R. Hoffmann indicated that he favored the move, but West Point officials suggested that "immediate" return would be difficult.

Army lawyers working with some civil lawyers who had also defended the cadets, said today that they had drafted a proposed schedule of return and submitted it to the commission several weeks ago.

One of the six panel members said later that the schedule seemed "feasible" to him, a civilian lawyer reported. "He said it was less involved than schedule changes often forced on colleges" and that it had been submitted to the office of Maj. Gen. Joseph P. Kingston, a Pentagon personnel expert heading a team examining the Borman Commission findings for Mr. Hoffmann.

The cadet lawyers, meanwhile, are preparing to poll as many of the nearly 150 ousted cadets throughout the nation as possible to determine how many are interested in returning. Many resigned under a special option to return next September for graduation in 1978.

The schedule drafted by the lawyers, one of whom said a separate but similar program had been devised by an implicated cadet still at the academy, would include the "dropping of no more than one course in the spring semester and makeup courses next summer."

He said this would conform to a previous West Point practice where seniors who had failed courses were permitted to take them again during the summer, with their commissions dated retroactively to June.

Officials at the United States Military

Academy also confirmed the lawyers' contention that cadet honor-committee representatives had recently been allowed to drop courses "in recognition of inordinately heavy work" redrafting honor system provisions.

A West Point spokesman said that 36 of the 88 members of the committee had been given permission in mid-November to drop up to three courses of a normal six-course program or were permitted to take pass-fail grades. A few of the cases included the first half of sequential courses.

Exceptions Are Urged

"If the Army can make exceptions for the good guys, it can make them for the so-called bad guys," a military lawyer said, "and if they adopt the plan we proposed, or one like it, before the new term begins Jan. 24, they would be able to graduate with their regular class," the lawyer said.

Meanwhile, three cadets among the last implicated in the widespread cheating on an engineering examination last March were ousted from West Point yesterday, or three days after the Borman Commission recommended that "all cadets presently at the academy whose separations have yet been affected will be allowed to remain."

This was one of three commission recommendations, the others being that the cadets who had left be returned as soon as possible and that all investigations of such cadets based on allegations in affidavits should cease. West Point explained that it was still operating under standing orders, and that it would not be affected by the Borman Commission recommendations until Mr. Hoffmann issued orders.

The Pentagon spokesman said that Hoffmann had approved the ouster of three cadets on Dec. 10, or five days before the Borman recommendations made public and officially turned to the Army Secretary for possible implementation.

Michael Rose, a former Air Force lawyer and expert on academy honor items who has defended many of the implicated cadets, said the next few weeks would "represent a period of intensity" in the cadet matter as a new press took office and President Jimmy Carter assumed his new o-

Convicted Rape-Killings Elderly Women

MURRAY ILSON
Two men were convicted by a jury in the Bronx yesterday of robbing and murdering elderly women.

Attorney Mario Merola of the Bronx said the two men were convicted of robbing and murdering elderly women. The District Attorney identified the two men convicted yesterday as Thomas Felton, 84 years old, of 1971 Marmion Avenue, and William Kirksey, 21, of 1595 East 17th Street.

According to Mr. Merola, the two defendants operated as a team that specialized in attacking elderly and defenseless men and women. He said that the attacks were "notable for their viciousness" and that the victims had been "beaten unmercifully" before they were raped and slain.

The District Attorney pointed out that Mr. Felton was also under indictment for a fourth killing, the murder of Rose Joseph, 88, whose dismembered body was found in her apartment at 2257 University Avenue on July 24, 1975.

In addition, Mr. Merola said, Mr. Felton is "a prime suspect in the killing of three other women and a man, for which he has not yet been indicted." The four victims, all slain in the summer of 1975, were in their 70's and 80's, Mr. Merola said.

The two men were convicted yesterday of the rape and strangulation on March 15, 1975, of Stella Bloswick, 77, of 2435 Devoe Terrace; the strangulation of Elsie Simon, 89, of 2634 Tiebout Avenue, on July 29, 1975; and the rape and strangulation on Sept. 3, 1975, of Margaret Doyle, 75, of 2476 Webb Avenue.

Mr. Merola said that when the two were sentenced on Jan. 7 by Justice Donald Sullivan they would face terms of 25 years to life in prison for each murder. If the sentence were imposed to run consecutively, he said, neither man would be eligible for parole for 30 years.

The District Attorney singled out Detective Al Lyman of the Ninth Homicide Zone for special praise in the investigation that led to the conviction of the two men. Mr. Merola said that Detective Lyman was investigating the Doyle murder when he received a radio report that police officers needed assistance in arresting a man in a purse-snatching case at the nearby Veterans Administration Hospital in the Bronx.

Mr. Merola said that Detective Lyman responded with three other detectives and, in the course of arresting Mr. Kirksey for the purse-snatching incident in which the suspect had allegedly knocked a 70-year-old woman to the ground, "came to realize that Kirksey might have a connection with the Doyle murder."

The District Attorney said that an investigation revealed that Mr. Kirksey was involved in the other murders and that "more checking turned up Felton."

Crime-Victim Unit Turned Down Half Of Aid Requests

By C. GERALD FRASER
New York State's Crime Victims Compensation Board rejected more than half the claims it received in the year ended last March 31 because it did not have enough information according to an audit of the board by the Office of the State Comptroller.

The board was founded 10 years ago to keep victims of criminal acts from having to depend on public assistance. Since then, it has awarded $13.3 million to victims. In recent years, the rate of applications has increased, and the amount of regular payments rose over the last four years by $1 million.

The auditors report, released yesterday, recommended that the board use a credit reporting agency to verify claimants' statements describing need.

The auditors also urged that the board speed up its processing of cases. Currently, it takes approximately seven months from the time a claim is filed until a voucher is paid.

Referring to the claims that were disallowed, the audit indicated that the number of claims disallowed in the fiscal year that ended last March was 1,682.

Of that number, 977 were thrown out because claimants had failed to furnish information, 211 because they met no minimum requirement and because they suffered no serious financial hardship.

Mellow-Up on the News

Vise

Benjamin G. Levich, a Soviet chemist and corresponding of the Academy of Sciences, emigrated to Israel in 1972, only did not get permission, left his posts with an institute, scientific committees and two editorials, and the chair he held at State University was abolished.

In 1974, on the eve of President M. Nixon's summit visit to Dr. Levich was summoned by officials and was told that his visa could leave by the end of the month and his wife the following day.

The sons went to Israel with him in the spring of 1975. That Dr. Levich was turned down despite the earlier promise, but used that his case would be red in 1976.

Levich now has the word. A low-employee of the Office of Visas Administrations has phoned to say exit visa has once more been on regime considerations. Levich, who has an offer to the California Institute of Technology this year, says he faces "an able wall of arbitrariness and force."

A Baffler

On May 2, 1939, the string snapped. Gehrig, The Yankees' "Iron Horse," suffering an unexpected loss of coordination, benched after playing in a record total of 213 consecutive major-league games.

Gehrig and Babe Ruth at Stadium on Lou Gehrig Day in 1939.

Over 14 years. In two years he died of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis.

Doctors knew of no cause of cure for disease they called A.L.S., but newspaper article at the time said "The national interest in the star is more than likely to retard medical advances in this trouble."

which is a hardening of the cord, is as baffling to doctors as it was 37 years ago. "They know the cause; they don't have a cure for it," a representative of the American Medical Association says. "You treat the symptoms; the patient as comfortable as possible; and to keep him from drowning in saliva."

In Los Angeles, 62-year-old H. Eames, whose wife has A.L.S., has the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society of America because, he found that medical interest in disease "was lost in the shuffle."

Calling himself as "a businessman realist," Mr. Bishop reports: "We're pointed toward $2.5 million search—we're well on our way. We're pointed toward supporting members — and we'll be on our way in that direction. The time has come for this disease solved."

in Vietnam

In hunt for new sources of oil quietly to Vietnam early this year, with American companies report negotiations with Hanoi for off-exploration rights. Last April a executive, who requested another, said he was convinced that "contracts" would be signed this month to exploit the Vietnamese oil reserves.

A executive who was so optimistic he says his company is no longer in the talks. Other American companies have pulled out, too. A roadblock is the United States go on trade with Vietnam that has been expected to relax and not.

There are now reports that Vietnam attempt to develop its own oil fields.

Building History

Along Green Park, the half-acre at the foot of Broadway where Minuit is said to have fast-talked Indians out of Manhattan Island 24, was to be rebuilt to "conform as closely as possible" to the way it had in the late 1700's. The IRT station at the park was to be renovated.

The New York City Transit Authority launched the joint project in March and forecast completion in about two years.

The subway station, which is getting a new platform and "improved entrance" will not be completed until next year, a Transit Authority spokesman reports, and the park will be rebuilt until the subway work is done.

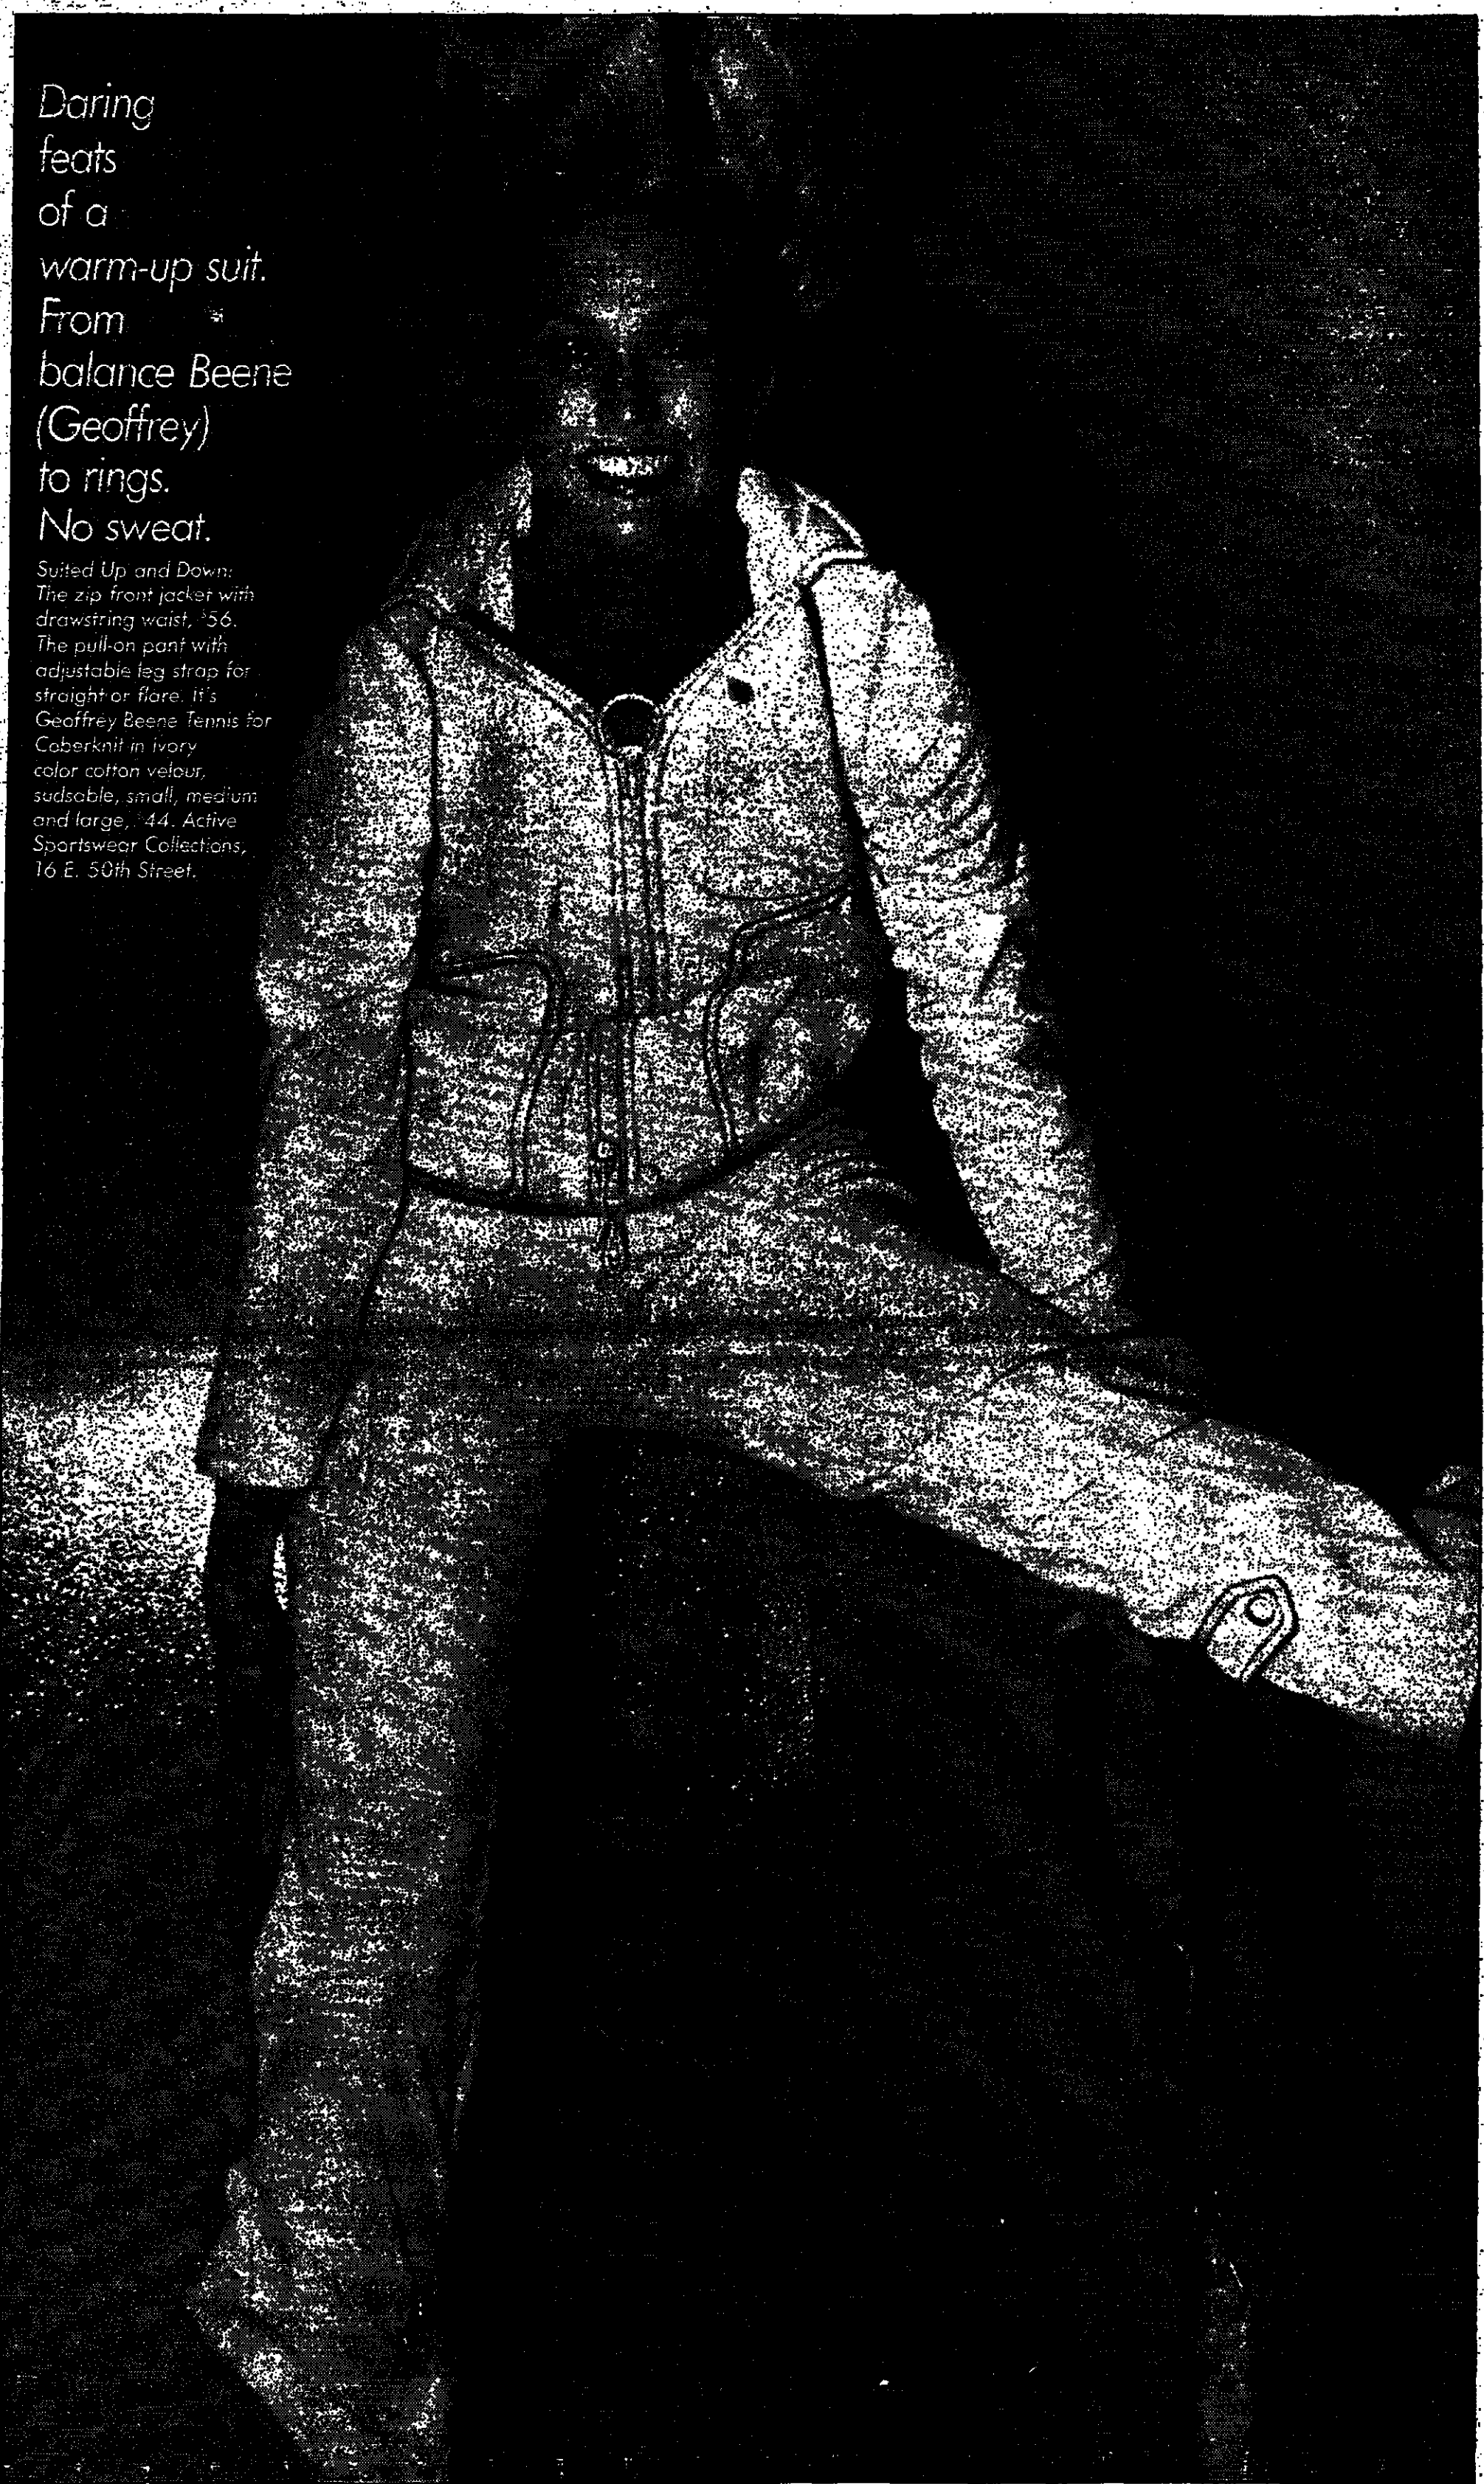

What will the "18th-century" park be like?

We're going back to the day when Dutch burgers decided that they to have a suitable piece of green-land and turf to relax with a game of ovals," the spokesman declares with a smile. Pushed for details, he explains: "What the heck do you want? It's going to be a lawn with some trees and it."

A Christmas Appeal: Give to the Neediest Cases Fund

Eyesight Slips Away, Yet Hope Glimmers

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN

Nothing you do in your life prepares you for blindness, and the reality of daylight dimming inexorably to never-ending night can be terrifying and frustrating and heartbreaking. It can strip you of your independence and plunge you into helplessness.

Betty M. knows that now. She was 36 years old when trouble with her left eye began—trouble bad enough to force her to leave the file clerk's job she held to support her three children and herself, giving up its income for Social Security disability benefits and welfare.

Mrs. M. waited, praying that her vision might improve as mysteriously as it had begun to disintegrate and hesitant to see a doctor for fear of what he might say. And when she finally did visit a clinic, her hope was all but ended: Mrs. M. found she had bilateral optic atrophy, a condition that causes the decay of nerves connecting the eyes to the brain.

"It didn't hit me too hard," she recalls now. "I could still see some through my other eye. I could get most places on my own."

Encouraged by Progress

The months passed, and Mrs. M. realized that her vision would not improve. She was relying increasingly on friends and neighbors to help her care for her home and her children, and she began to feel a need to train to overcome her handicap.

With some skepticism and some fear, she entered the Brooklyn Bureau of Community Service's homemaking assistance training program, and, encouraged by her progress, began to think of retraining for a job.

But it was not to be. Suddenly, Mrs. M.'s right eye ceased functioning, leaving her totally and permanently blind. Once again she found herself dependent, but this time she knew where to turn.

Mrs. D., on the other hand, stumbled upon help almost by accident. She was upset by the conditions in which she lived, and one day she walked into the Community Service Society's Friendship Center, hesitantly searching out a social worker and told her so. The social worker found that Mrs. D. had good reason to be disturbed: Her husband was half-vacant, deteriorating and frequently by drug addicts and derelicts who loitered in the halls and on the stairways.

Mrs. D., a tiny, frail woman, suffers at 85 years of age from Parkinson's disease and the confusion and disorientation that can accompany old age. "Living in that house, in that kind of health, she could have been nudged any day," said Reva Joffe, a case consultant for the Friendship Center.

Mrs. M. and Mrs. D. are among thousands of cases aided by the eight social-welfare agencies that benefit from The New York Times Neediest Cases Fund.

Betty M., who has lost the sight of both eyes, is rearing three children.

Fund, which is now in the midst of its 65th annual appeal. These agencies can make a life-and-death difference in the lives of their clients, relying on the contributions of the more fortunate to aid the less fortunate.

The Community Service Society, one of the city's oldest social welfare agencies, helped Mrs. D. through the winter of real tape required to increase her Supplemental Security Income benefits to the amount to which she was entitled by the law.

And, seeing that she was no longer able to care for herself, the agency provided for a housekeeper, who cooks for her and ensures that she eats properly.

"Without us, Mrs. D. would be pretty much alone," said Miss Joffe. "We try to help her know that we are concerned, that we will help her, that if she has problems there is always somebody here that she can speak to about them."

Betty M. has been slowly trying to regain her independence. She walked slowly down the hall of the Brooklyn Bureau of Community Service building the other day toward her caseworker's office, feeling her way with the aluminum cane she learned to use there.

She sat down slowly in a corner chair, collapsing the cane and looking with sightless eyes toward a visitor's voice, through the clear hexagonal glasses she kept from her sighted days and which she still wears.

Cooks for Her Family

"Sometimes it hits me pretty hard," she says, forcing a smile. "But I try to say, 'So what? If I let it upset me too much it's not good for me.'"

But Mrs. M. says she is learning, adapting to a life without sight. She has joined the Brooklyn Bureau's vocational program, and is "working Pan Am"—repackaging the supplies on the airline's stereo headphones—in the agency's sheltered workshop.

She has learned to better handle her children, and with the help of a social worker is teaching them to adapt to her condition as well.

She tries to cook for her family at least once a week, and with the help of her children and a landlady who is a close friend, Mrs. M. is able to handle most household chores.

Her children, ages 4, 11 and 16, help around the house or aid her in shopping at the grocery store—"when they don't pass the buck," she says with a slight grin.

And if you tell her she has spirit, she smiles.

"I don't like for nobody to really feel sorry for me," she says. "I try to put the good on the outside."

She says that the Brooklyn Bureau of Community Service has helped that a lot.

"It's kept my spirit up," Mrs. M. says. "It's given me hope."

Human Toll Is Exact By City Budget Slashes

By MSGR. JAMES J. MURRAY

Executive director, Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York

In his "Tale of Two Cities," Charles Dickens might have been alluding to the climate of recent times in New York City when he wrote: "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us."

The year 1976 entered on a note of expectancy as we joyfully prepared for our nation's Bicentennial and looked forward hopefully to a rekindling of that spirit of liberty and justice we as a people sought 200 years ago. While the hope remains, there also lingers a note of anxiety for many of our fellow New Yorkers as social and human problems continue to accumulate in a city battered by inflation, unemployment, declining revenues and a deteriorating quality of community life.

It has been a year in which human services continued to pay the penalty for the sacrifices imposed on a cash-starved city and its citizens as the price for surviving when a limping economy and crippling cuts in public life-support services exacted a high cost in human suffering; when prolonged unemployment stripped many heads of households of their ability to feed, clothe and shelter their families; when unemployment benefits ran out for many New Yorkers; and when the aged and disabled besieged by ill health, isolation and fear struggled to stretch the shrunken purchasing power of their Social Security dollars.

Ever-Tighter Budgets

It has been a year during which, as public service money became ever more scarce, the number of distressed families and individuals turning to tightly budgeted voluntary agencies increased and multiplied. And it has been a year when we at New York Catholic Charities persisted in our uphill effort to meet the challenge of fulfilling our obligations to the needy in the face of restricted income, reduced staff and trimmed service programs.

Without the funds contributed in last year's New York Times Neediest Cases appeal, our ability to lend help would have been even more stringently limited. Let us recount a few of the many ways your Christmas gift to that appeal helped New York Catholic Charities lighten the burden of the neediest who sought our assistance:

It came as a reprieve from emotional and economic strain for John F., 37, father of four. An unemployed sales manager, he was confronted with exhausted unemployment benefits and savings, no response to job applications and anxiety on his children's faces. Mr. F. was willing to try anything rather than go on relief. Our New York Catholic Charities' Free Placement Service found him a job as a doorman for a private club. While the job entails a step-down in career, income and life style, it provided a psychological uplift in a time of crisis.

For a large percentage of friendless, often mentally confused aged persons living alone—persons whose only family is their Catholic Charities social worker—your contribution meant their "security blanket" was secure for another year. Among these was Michael F., 83, who came into our office announcing, "I turn my life over to you." He is one of the many who depend on us to hold their lives for safekeeping, pay their rent, give their care, offer reassurance when necessary, to arrange for burial.

For Carmen S., it meant an end to the cycle of poverty and that marked her family back. Carmen was an abused child who on became a court ward and, passed, a school dropout with a bleak future. With the sustained encouragement and guidance of "The aged and disabled... struggled to stretch the power of Social Security dollars."

Neighborhood Youth Corps staff men gained on-the-job training, earned their high school equivalent diploma and last year became supporting clerical employees in our affiliate agencies.

To Emma J., a 60-year-old and a homeless victim of the economic crisis, your gift brought the assurance of remaining on a familiar street, the assurance that has been her home for 36 years. We assigned a Catholic Charities worker to do her shopping, cook, and provide her with much needed companionship.

Helping the Deaf and Retarded. Among other instances too numerous to mention, contributions to the Neediest Cases Fund helped provide 17 deaf and retarded children with a six-day camping program, gave a chance for their first summer vacation in years, helped many struggling families cope with problems arising from economic difficulties and spared children the loss of their homes.

New York has more disturbed, homeless children, more chronic more troubled families, more isolated and lonely persons than other large metropolitan areas. The need to help them is a tremendous one. It is a need that has become even greater since 1977 when more cuts are expected in city budgets.

It has been said that we in ourselves but become a part of that around us. What affects the quality of life of all of us. More than ever before, a year of our Lord can none of us be an island, nor can any of us disengage ourselves from the needs of our neighbors. Your neighbors need New York Catholic Charities. New York Catholic Charities need you!

Wherever and Whenever There Is Need, There Is Help

Major statements from the heads of four agencies that helped through the Neediest Cases Fund have appeared on these pages since the drive opened Dec. 5. Some of the special concerns of the other four agencies assisted by the fund are detailed in the following statements:

Catholic Charities, Diocese of Brooklyn

As the official health and social welfare arm of the Diocese of Brooklyn, Catholic Charities is committed to deliver a full range of services to all the people of Brooklyn and Queens. Responding to the loving concern of the servant church, we consider our neighborhood-based programs and services as a mandated opportunity to create trust and relationships among people, whatever their religious, ethnic or economic backgrounds.

For us, then, wherever and whenever there is human need, there must be service.

We operate 11 community human-service centers and six community mental health clinics in Brooklyn and Queens. Responding to the total spectrum of problems and pressures faced by families and individuals, our human service centers provide family and personal counseling, serve as advocates for benefits to families and the aged, and reply to needs related to physical and mental health, employment and housing.

Nine child-care agencies affiliated with Catholic Charities supply foster care for about 5,000 children and their families every year. Led and coordinated by the direct services of Brooklyn Catholic Charities, comprehensive program of family, child welfare and mental hygiene services is offered to children in their own homes, in family day-care homes and congregated day-care centers, in adoption-services and foster-care institutions and in boarding and group homes. These services are offered primarily in low-income neighborhoods.

The children of Williamsburg are served by the Peter C. Rocco Reception Center, directed by St. Joseph's Children's Services, which specializes in residential care for youngsters who are dependent, neglected, abused or court-assigned Persons in Need of Supervision.

For adolescent boys, Brooklyn

Catholic Charities and the Catholic Guardian Society of Brooklyn and Queens conduct the Cleaver Group Home in Bushwick. A small residential community, this home seeks to engender a family environment for boys who, because of behavioral problems, are not easily assimilated into the child-care population.

For about 200 boys whose fathers are deceased or separated from their families, the Catholic Big Brothers furnish concern, counsel and direction on a one-to-one basis. Opportunities for youth development are the purpose of the Catholic Youth Organization's many activities.

All programs for the deaf, blind, physically handicapped and mentally retarded are aimed at enabling every person to develop his full potential for life and happiness. To afford retarded persons with a family-like living environment, training for employment and enjoyment of companionship, Catholic Charities operates three hostels for the adult retarded. Training in life skills is available to severely and profoundly retarded adults both at the Adult Day Care Center in Brooklyn and at home.

For the sick in hospitals, Brooklyn Catholic Charities conducts a Pastoral Care Program, with a community pastoral care program established in South Brooklyn.

Charities and the Saint Vincent De Paul Society jointly conduct prison ministries for inmates of the Brooklyn and Queens House of Detention.

To enable the aged of the diocese to live fuller lives in their own homes and communities, Catholic Charities has developed a full range of services. To accomplish the goal of independence and dignity, we emphasize services and support at the neighborhood level. Five centers for the elderly furnish hot meals daily free of charge and provide social, recreational and cultural activities, health consultation and counseling.

Children's Aid Society

The Children's Aid Society has served the helpless, deprived and handicapped children of this city regardless of their race or creed, since 1853.

Among them are poor children who learn to live with pangs of hunger, cold and loneliness. Neglected children who have never known the warmth and comfort of parental love and care. Abused children who relive the nightmares of terror, distrust and pain. Retarded children confined in the narrow vision of their limited worlds. Troubled, tense children who strike out at a world they view as hostile, or withdraw to the safe sanctuary of their own mind's eye. Handicapped children, dependent, isolated, lonely and immobilized. And just plain kids in the throes of growing up, looking for friends, for things to do, for love, limits and a sense of achievement.

We have sought during the years to help these children help themselves to richer, fuller lives; to assure their physical and mental health; to keep families together where possible and desirable; to provide warm living, secure surrogate families where it is not, and to enable all children to grow to their maximum potentials.

As we begin our 124th year, we must turn for increasing support to friends in the community who share our concern and our commitment as advocates for children. The curtailment of helping and healing services in the public sector has thrown additional burdens on the voluntary agencies. Children and families in the deprived communities we serve are turning to us in increasing numbers. As unemployment rates have continued to soar, particularly among minority groups, more families are requesting assistance with material needs as well as enabling services. Requests for shoes and warm clothing have increased enormously.

Rising costs, decreased public grants and static contributions have compelled us to reduce the size of our staff. It will require yeoman efforts to respond to the 100,000 children who will turn to our various services again this year.

To our seven multiservice community centers, adoption and foster care services, homemaker service, neighborhood based mental health clinics, Head Start programs, Special Learning Center, tutorial programs, drug prevention programs, retarded children's programs, health and dental services, Wagon Road Camp for Handicapped Children, Osborn Day Camp, winter weekend camping programs, Prevention Demonstration program (to keep children out of placement) and to our Pretrial Diversionary Program for young first offenders.

We have demonstrated repeatedly for over a century that children with serious disabilities can overcome even the most formidable obstacles, and grow into healthy, mature, productive adults with the help of skilled, devoted, caring people.

We hope, during this critical period, that each New York Times reader will help us to help one child or one family so that not a single request need be denied.

Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies

The Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies Inc. is on hand when people need help. It is there when the aging need help and reassurance; when families are having difficulty in caring for children—and raising children who care; when the joint pressures of a depressed economy and inflation have added overwhelming burdens to everyday living.

Among the types of services available through its affiliates are adoption, day care, foster and group home care for children; camping programs; residences for adults, youth and children; scholarship and recreational programs; neighborhood centers; family counseling; hospital and health care; homes and centers for the aged; services for unwed mothers, and drug and alcohol addiction programs.

Many confused and fearful people use the Federation's Personal Referral Service. Here, the troubled are able to benefit from skilled casework and sympathetic council. The emphasis is on the individual and referrals to the city's helping agencies are made on the basis of their ability to best meet the needs of the person seeking help.

The Federation works to coordinate and strengthen the efforts of its members. It helps them to develop programs to fill unmet needs and operate effectively and efficiently. The majority of people served by its affiliates come from the disadvantaged minorities of New York City. They provide basic human services for the people handicapped by discrimination, inferior or inadequate education and underemployment or unemployment.

The Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies is the only Protestant and nonsectarian agency of its kind in the Greater New York area. It depends for the largest part of its support upon contributions from people who care and are distressed by the present order of things and the problems they generate. Through the years, contributors to Neediest Cases Appeal have been numbered among this group.

Staten Island Family Service. Staten Island Family Service was established 57 years ago with the primary goal of strengthening family life. During these years the agency has provided marriage counseling, child guidance and individual counseling to the Staten Island Community. As the only nonsectarian family agency on the island the agency has had to try to meet the needs of the growing population on Staten Island.

During the last few years the number of social-service facilities on Staten Island has increased in almost every area, but that of family counseling. Staten Island Family Service has continued to be totally dependent on funds that can be raised from the community. Unfortunately while the need for our services is increasing our income has been drastically reduced.

There have been staff cutbacks and we have to face the prospect of seeing troubled families enduring long waits for the help they need. Sometimes, for example, an unhappy couple may separate before counseling starts. A great deal of bitterness is engendered during the waiting period, thus creating another obstacle to solving a problem. Or, a troubled adolescent may drop out of school or become delinquent because his request for help could not be met on time. People who do find that no one cares about it find this feeling confirmed when are given an appointment far in future.

Staten Island Family Service is immediate help to continue the job they have been doing for the last century of enabling people to lead a satisfactory lives.

In addition to carrying out the traditional role of the agency, increased sources would make it possible to the community to benefit from a range of services now provided by other agencies. The maze of new agency regulations often make it difficult for people to receive the services which they are entitled. Staten Island Family Service can act as an advocate that everyone can feel that they have a "friend at court." The community can benefit in many ways from role that can be played only by voluntary agencies.

Judge and Prosecutor Are Accused of a Ruse to Convict a Suspect

By MAX H. SEIGEL

An acting State Supreme Court justice and the city's special narcotics prosecutor have been accused of conspiring to supply false information to a grand jury to obtain an indictment that would make a government informant appear to be a criminal and thereby insure his safety.

Also accused of taking part in the alleged conspiracy were the Police Department, which was said to have given false testimony; the Legal Aid Society, which reportedly pretended to defend the informant, and the informant himself.

The accusations were contained in a $20 million damage suit filed in Federal Court in Brooklyn last week by Paul Spera, who was indicted, along with the informant, on charges of possessing narcotics, a crime punishable by 15 years to life imprisonment.

Arthur M. Diamond, an assistant district attorney in the office of Sterling Johnson Jr., the special narcotics prosecutor, said that there had been a plan to have the informant, Louis Manzella, indicted. But he said it had been carried out to save Mr. Manzella's life and to keep the informant working as an undercover agent.

Mr. Manzella and his wife have been placed in protective custody and are understood to be living outside the state.

Mr. Diamond disclosed that during the week after Mr. Spera was arrested, the informant was approached by associates of Mr. Spera. They warned him that if they learned that Mr. Manzella was an informant and had "set Spera up," they would kill him and his family.

"The people," Mr. Diamond said, "were thus confronted with a difficult and dangerous situation. Manzella was providing valuable assistance to investigations into organized narcotics traffic, yet the continued absence of Manzella from the Special Narcotics Court as a codefendant of Spera's was arousing suspicions."

As a result, Mr. Diamond said, permission was obtained from acting Justice Norman B. Fitzer and from other authorities to go ahead with the false indictment.

Mr. Spera's lawyer, David S. Jacobs, contended in the papers filed in Federal Court that Mr. Manzella, posing as an indicted drug dealer, attended at least 10 meetings with him and Mr. Spera to prepare defense strategy for the trial.

Constitutional Rights at Issue

"He was a most interested party," Mr. Jacobs said. "He contributed to these conversations. He prodded your plaintiff and his counsel as to what his trial strategy would be, made suggestions, inquired as to the names of witnesses and exchanged ideas and facts with your plaintiff and his counsel. At no time did Manzella ever indicate that he was an informant or intimate that the indictment against him was a complete sham or fraud."

As a result, Mr. Jacobs charged, his client's constitutional rights were violated and he was denied a fair trial.

The lawyer also charged in the court papers that when he consulted with Kenneth Wirful, a Legal Aid Society lawyer representing the informant, Mr. Wirful never indicated that his client, Mr. Manzella, was "under a sham indictment."

In addition, Mr. Jacobs said, Mr. Wirful had intentionally slowed the progress of the case, denying Mr. Spera's right to a speedy trial for as long as five months.

"The Legal Aid Society," he added, "through the actions of Mr. Wirful, had taken an active role in violating the most sacred and honored traditions of law and justice, which the society so publicly and vocally espouses."

Mr. Jacobs said he had reported the conspiracy to John Keenan, the state's special anticorruption prosecutor. "Mr. Keenan expressed an interest," he said. The lawyer added that he was turning over to the special prosecutor all pertinent information in the case.

A spokesman for Mr. Keenan said he had no comment. But when reached by telephone last week, Mr. Johnson, the special narcotics prosecutor, said:

"Everything was done with the court's permission and everything fed to the jury was the truth."

Mr. Spera is now at liberty under $25,000 bail, awaiting trial on the drug charges.

CB OPERATORS ASSISTING POLICE SAFETY PROGRAM

ALBANY (AP)—Approximately 6,000 citizen-band radio operators are cooperating with the New York state police in a 15-month experiment aimed at greater public involvement in highway safety.

Through the experimental program, which is being conducted in seven central New York counties, the state police hope to determine the effects of working closely with CB operators.

The Superintendent of the state police, William Connelie, said the users of the citizens band "will act as our second eyes and ears" by reporting emergencies to monitoring stations at trooper stations in the seven-county area.

The program should "result in a thorough evaluation of the effectiveness of a CB link between motorists and the state police," Superintendent Connelie said.

The state police hope to find out how CB reports from civilians can reduce police response time to emergencies, alleviate traffic delays, detect unsafe driving conditions, spot criminal acts and provide public services.

CB radios and related equipment have been installed in 150 patrol cars, two state police helicopters and 22 stations in the study area, which is made up of Jefferson, Lewis, Oswego, Oneida, Herkimer, Madison and Onondaga Counties. The program is being paid for by two Federal grants totaling $177,000.

Inadequate Conditions May Bring Order to Shut Putnam County Jail

Special to The New York Times

CARMEL, N.Y., Dec. 18—One of the state's oldest county jails, which has been cited as unsafe, inadequate and unsanitary by the State Commission of Correction almost yearly since it was built in 1906, is being threatened with closing for the second time in recent years.

According to Dorothy Wadsworth, a member of the commission, officials of the Putnam County Board of Supervisors and the jail have been directed to appear at a hearing in Albany next Tuesday "to show cause why the Putnam County jail should not be closed."

A team of investigators for the commission visited the jail with health and fire inspectors earlier this month and found it to be "unsafe, unsanitary and inadequate for the separation and classification of prisoners as required by law," Mrs. Wadsworth said.

Closing Ordered in 1968

In 1968, the commission ordered that the jail be closed for the same reasons as those listed in this week's citation. The order was later held in abeyance, and the commission recommended that funds be set aside each year to construct a new jail, a procedure that has not been followed.

Sheriff Raynor Weizenecker of Putnam County said he had requested budget allocations for a new jail from the Board of Supervisors several times since he took office about 10 years ago, but the request had always been denied. "Last month I told them to take action or I would request that the Correction Commission close the jail," he said.

Joseph Percacciolo, chairman of the Board of Supervisors, said:

"We just don't have any funds to make changes in the jail or to build a new one. Our taxpayers are taxed to the limit."

Mr. Percacciolo noted that the jail was very old, but said it was "clean, neat and sanitary," and added: "The prisoners do not have all the advantages of being home but, after all, it's a jail."

The two-story jail, at the back of the county courthouse in the center of the Village of Carmel, was designed to hold 18 prisoners, but, according to the sheriff, the population sometimes reaches 30 or more.

"We double up with makeshift cots and mattresses on the floor," he said, adding that women prisoners, who formerly had been housed on the second floor, were being held in the Ulster County jail in Kingston. The administrators try to keep the facility clean, Sheriff Weizenecker said.

No Place for Visits

"But it's so old," he went on. "It's rotting on the inside, there's no ventilation. The showers are old iron showers, and they're eroding and rotting under the paint. There is no way you can get in and clean them."

Because of a lack of space, it is impossible to separate minors, felons, sentenced and unsentenced prisoners, as required by law. It is also impossible to comply with the commission's order to allow contact visits for prisoners, the sheriff said.

If the jail is closed, he said, the county would have to pay for the transporting of prisoners to other counties and for housing them there, a cost that would range from $18 to $22 a day in some upstate jails to $38 a day in Westchester County.

"I just want to get some funds and get a new jail built," he said. "Other counties are doing it."

After hearing testimony from the sheriff and members of the Board of Supervisors, the commission will decide what action should be taken. Commissioner Wadsworth said, adding:

"It is always the tendency to, in every way, work out possible alternatives to a jail closing."

Higher Fees for Speeders Voided

By EDWARD HUDSON

The State Department of Motor Vehicles has been enjoined from doubling or tripling the license-renewal fees of drivers convicted of speeding or other moving violations—a measure it adopted last Sept. 1 to pay for driver-rehabilitation programs.

The injunction was issued last Monday in Albany by State Supreme Court Justice George L. Cobb, who ruled in a suit brought against the state by a Rockville Centre, L.I., woman whose license fee was doubled as a result of a traffic conviction two years ago.

Mrs. Frank Perloff, the plaintiff, had argued that James P. Melton, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, was not authorized to increase the fees, which in the case of ordinary operators' licenses range from $3.50 to $4.50, depending on whether they are the old three-year licenses or new four-year licenses that are being phased in.

A spokesman for the Motor Vehicles Department said that Commissioner Melton had met with the department's legal staff to study the possibility of an appeal. The spokesman said that "until a decision has been rendered by the Court of Appeals, the department will continue to collect the surcharge for moving violations."

Last spring, the Legislature cut the $1.3 million cost of the rehabilitation programs from the department's budget and at the same time authorized the department to re-establish the programs if they could be "reimbursed by receipts from fees established by the Commissioner."

Subsequently, the department announced the new fees—double for motorists who have had one or two moving violations in the previous three years, and triple if they have had three or more. The department said that about one-quarter of the state's drivers—440,000 of the two million whose licenses expire in the state's next fiscal year—would be liable for the new assessment.

Justice Cobb, in his ruling, held that the Legislature intended to limit spending to the sums that could "reasonably be raised in the exercise by the Commissioner of his authority to set fees under the said existing statutes." He directed that Mrs. Perloff be repaid the $4.50 that had been assessed against her.

Donald T. Phillips, legislative chairman of the New York State Automobile Association, which acted as a friend of the court in the suit, called the decision "just and equitable."

Two days after the judge's ruling, the State Senate majority leader, Warren M. Anderson, Republican of Binghamton, announced the introduction of a bill that would prohibit any future increases in license fees without legislative action, and would require the penalties already paid by drivers to be refunded.

He said that driver-improvement programs should be financed by those who are required to participate, "not through the illegal, unauthorized imposition of new taxes."

Panel of New York Council Votes Longer Home-Foreclosure Time

By EDWARD RANZAL

One- and two-family homes and condominiums occupied by owners or their immediate families would be exempted from foreclosure by New York City for tax arrears for three years under a bill voted out Friday by the City Council's Finance Committee.

Under pressure to speed up the collection of hundreds of thousands of dollars in delinquent real-estate taxes, a local law was recently enacted to permit the city to take foreclosure after one year, instead of three years.

Contending that the homeowner was "the backbone" of the city, committee members enthusiastically supported the exemption bill, which would restore to three years any possible foreclosure action against this group.

Edward L. Sadowsky, Democrat of Queens and the committee chairman, said the bill was aimed at benefiting "anyone not making money on real estate."

Homeowners' Burdens Cited

Councilman Walter Ward, Democrat of Queens, spoke of homeowners burdened by medical bills or unemployment who had to face possible foreclosure in the same year. "I can't see why we want to hurt the very people the city relies on," he said.

Representing the Beame administration, Jerome Rosenthal, chief lawyer for the Finance Department, noted that the Mayor had supported the one-year foreclosure law, but that there was some basis for affording relief to small homeowners.

He suggested that, instead of a three-year exemption, foreclosure action should be taken after two years. Eleven Councilmen, seven of them members of the committee, seated around the committee table all took exception to the two-year suggestion.

"If we passed the three-year bill, do you think the Mayor would veto it?" Mr. Sadowsky asked.

"I can't speak for the Mayor," Mr. Rosenthal answered.

Councilman John F. Gangemi, Republican of Brooklyn, told Mr. Rosenthal: "You can tell the Mayor we'll fight him tooth and nail."

Mr. Sadowsky, who was serving his first day as chairman of the committee, then noted that only seven members of the 14-member committee were present—not enough for a passing vote—and adjourned the meeting.

However, while the Councilmen wandered about the committee room, Councilman Samuel D. Wright, Democrat of Brooklyn, rushed breathlessly into the room, and explained that he had been conferring with Mayor Beame on an investigation into the recent shooting of a black youth by a white policeman.

With Mr. Wright in place, Mr. Sadowsky hurriedly reconvened the meeting and produced eight favorable votes. The full Council is expected to pass the measure shortly.

Schedule of Hearings To Be Held by Council

The following public hearings will be held by New York City Council committees this week.

Monday—The Committee on Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs will consider five bills to rename streets and parks. 250 Broadway, 23d Floor, 10 A.M.

Tuesday—The Committee on Rules, Privileges and Elections will consider the appointment of 10 commissioners of elections and the appointment of nine members of the City Council Redistricting Commission pursuant to Charter revisions. 9:30 A.M. The full Council will hold a regular meeting at 1:30 P.M.

New Hampshire Scofflaws Resist New York City Effort to Get Fines Paid

By FRANK J. FRIAL

New York City is trying to collect $70,000 from New Hampshire scofflaws as a first payment on unpaid tickets, and the flinty New Englanders have got their backs up.

Some of the New Hampshire folks say they are innocent victims of Big Apple bureaucracy, and their Governor has sprung quickly to their aid.

"Under no circumstances will New Hampshire citizens be subject to legal action by New York City officials in our courts," Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. declared, "unless there is solid evidentiary documentation to back it up." Which, in nonbureaucratic language, means: "If they can prove it, you'll probably have to pay up."

Actually, according to New York City's Transportation Administration, New Hampshire residents owe more than $1.3 million on unpaid tickets. The $70,000, according to Alexander J. Mautner, the administrator, is merely the opening salvo in the city's campaign to make Granite Staters pay up. It represents 713 separate bills to New Hampshire people with the greatest number of parking tickets.

One Spurns Bill for $40

Louisa Woodman of Hampton, N. H., got a bill for $40 from New York City. But, Mrs. Woodman said, "I've only been in New York once in my life" and that was to transfer from one airport to another in a taxi cab.

Mr. Mautner insists that the Transportation Administration's computer is 99 percent accurate. Whether Mrs. Woodman comes under the other 1 percent or not has yet to be determined. Governor Thomson has instructed Mrs. Woodman and any other New Hampshire who feels he has been given a bum rap to ignore the bill from New York.

New Hampshire scofflaws are not New York's only targets. Residents of 30 states are being dunned for $40 million in unpaid tickets. Thanks to the computer, in six months the city has collected $10 million that it would not have taken in otherwise, Mr. Mautner said.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr.

New Hampshire's deputy attorney general, Thomas Rath, suggested that the wrong people might be getting billed because of his state's practice of rotating license plate numbers every two years. New York might be billing the new owner of the number, not the one who incurred the fine, he said.

Not so, said the Transportation Administration. "If the ticket was issued in 1973, we billed whoever held the number then, not whoever has it now," said Abel Silver, assistant transportation administrator.

Reciprocity Does Not Apply
Mr. Silver acknowledged that there was no reciprocal agreement between New York and New Hampshire on such things as parking tickets. At the same time, he reasoned, anyone from New Hampshire who has collected a lot of New York tickets has to spend a lot of time here.

"They may have a business here, or other property," Mr. Silver said. "It would be within our power to attach their property or their cars."

Governor Thomson warned that his state might retaliate by placing "a lien on the Statue of Liberty and relocate it at the entrance to Portsmouth Harbor, where people are free from economic deficits and government harassment."

to begin his own campaign of governmental harassment. He has announced that his state police will harass Massachusetts and Vermont tax agents every holiday season, try to catch every one of their states returning with spurious liquor stores. The stores are New Hampshire's biggest source of revenue.

Early-Parole Plan In Effect for 3,000 In New York State

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD Jr.

Prison officials in New York State are giving early parole consideration to 3,000 inmates in an effort to reduce overcrowding and make room for the many new prisoners coming into the prison system each month.

Michael Falk, executive vice president of the New York State Parole Officers Association, criticized the early-parole program, saying it would impose large numbers of criminals on "unprotected communities that are already gripped with fear" and might increase the number of such attacks as the fatal shooting of a parole officer last Monday.

So far, about 1,500 prisoners have been given special parole hearings since the program began in October, according to a spokesman for the Department of Correctional Services, which runs the state prisons. But it remained unclear how many of them had actually been released.

Officials of the department refused to discuss the program last night. Earlier in the month they had insisted it did not exist.

Under the "accelerated-release program" prisoners who are within three months of completing minimum sentences set by the Parole Board and certain inmates convicted for other than violent crimes are receiving parole hearings much sooner than they normally would, according to Joseph Sallo, executive secretary of the Parole Board. Inmates with minimum sentences set by the courts, however, could not be considered before serving those minimums, he said.

To accomplish the new objective, the state's 12 Parole Board members have had to double their monthly hearing caseloads from 1,200 to 2,400 applicants and often have to work 12-hour days, Mr. Sallo said.

Mr. Sallo said the accelerated-release program had two parts—one involving about 1,200 prisoners who were within three months of completing their minimum sentences and a second for those who had committed nonviolent crimes.

Mr. Falk said his group had learned that the second group, selected by computer by the Department of Correctional Services, involved about 2,000 additional prisoners.

"However, after screening by senior parole officers that group was reduced to about 800," he said.

Some 'Mistakes' Made

Mr. Sallo said many of the names selected by the department's computer to be rejected "because of mistakes such as selecting men that had recently gone before the board and some that had to serve court-ordered minimum sentences."

He explained that the Parole Board set minimum sentence for prisoners who did not receive minimum sentences from the courts.

In a statement released through Mr. Sallo, Edward R. Hammock, chairman of the Parole Board, said:

"The Department of Correctional Services asked for the board's cooperation in a rational program to reduce the inmate population, by the board seeing inmates who were close to the end of their minimum sentences.

"The department does have a problem of overcrowding, and it makes good sense for the board to attempt to deal with that problem, and we have. However, let it be clear that our judgments as to who will be admitted to parole are based on the same criteria that are normally used by the board in making release decisions."

"The board has attempted since the program began to see all the candidates who were selected. This naturally resulted in a tremendous increase in the number of people who the board has seen during the last couple of months."

"The number of inmates released under the program has been low because the selection criteria used by the Department of Correction has not provided a significant number of candidates to be released."

The statement did not give figures on the number of prisoners released, and Mr. Sallo said he did not have the data.

The Department of Correctional Services has said that the state's prisons are running at 100 percent of capacity, with more than 18,000 inmates.

Beame Adviser Presses for Establishment Of Post of Deputy Mayor for Operations

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

It has been nine months since Mayor Beame's office first acknowledged it was considering the creation of the post of deputy mayor for operations. There have been plenty of new deputy mayors since then—Osborn Elliott for economic development, John C. Burton for finance and Nicholas Scoppetta for criminal justice—but no one for the operations post.

The chief reason for the delay is said to be Mr. Beame's extraordinary sensitivity to charges that he is creating a gigantic superstructure at City Hall at a time of slashing personnel cuts in the city at large. When the Mayor entered office, there were three deputy mayors. He now has six, although the criminal-justice position was mandated by the new City Charter.

The idea of yet another deputy mayor is being pushed by Richard Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, who, as executive director of the Mayor's Management Advisory Board, is the primary source of recommendations to improve operations at City Hall.

And the leading candidate for the job is said to be Lee Oberst, a vice president of the New York Telephone Company, who for months has been talking with Mr. Beame's office about going to City Hall.

Mr. Oberst, who is 58 years old, is given credit for upgrading phone operations in the New York City region, where there were nightmarish problems only a few years ago. He started out with the Bell System in 1946 as a $28-a-week switchman. Today he is seen as a "manager par excellence"—in the words of one aide—whose skills could certainly serve the city well.

The logic of having a deputy mayor for operations lies in the felt need to put someone in charge of the management system installed in the agencies last summer. First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti oversees the system now, but his attention is constantly being diverted by crises.

Two other problems have stood in the way of the creation of the new job. First, Mr. Beame is said to be worried over whether the new job would dilute the supposedly expanded responsibilities of the Budget Bureau, which is now called the Office of Management and Budget—particularly since Mr. Oberst is said to have refused to take any job that did not have real power and responsibility.

Second, there has been a sensitive problem in that Mr. Beame opposes the recent request for telephone rate increases. With the city in an adversary position against the telephone company, mayoral officials wonder about the propriety of importing a top officer of that company to make policy at City Hall.

For years, Mayors of New York City have been making so many pilgrimages for assistance to Washington and Albany that their travels and travails could easily fill a new volume of tales from Canterbury. Certainly one of the more unusual pilgrimages, however, took place last week when Mr. Beame rode in a bus from downtown Atlanta to meet with President-elect Jimmy Carter at the Georgia Governor's mansion.

The bus carried a sign saying "Very Important Persons," but this encouraging designation failed to impress the mayoral aides, who had to stand for a couple of hours out in the cold—along with dozens of reporters, who are at least used to that sort of thing—while the Mayors met with Mr. Carter inside.

Aides to Mr. Beame, some of whom worked hard to coordinate the Mayor's endorsement of Mr. Carter last spring, were furious that no accommodations had been made for them. The reason was not particularly convincing. The Governor's mansion had recently been renovated, the aides were told, and Georgia officials were worried that the antique furnishings could not withstand an invasion of city folk.

The President-elect promised the Mayors what he had been promising all along—that he would listen and study their proposals. Nothing concrete was granted, in other words, but some officials drew encouragement from the selection of W. Michael Blumenthal as Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Blumenthal is chairman of the Bendix Corporation, which has its headquarters in Southfield, Mich., but which is also a client of Lazard Frères & Company, the investment-banking concern whose general partner is Felix G. Rohatyn. Mr. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation and chief architect of New York City's financial rescue, is, in fact, an old friend of Mr. Blumenthal's, and the two are said to have already had discussions about New York City.

There are times at City Hall when things look as if they could not get worse. These times are invariably followed by things getting worse.

Such was the case the other day for Mr. Zuccotti—the First Deputy Mayor and a man who has enough crises to handle—who was driving on the Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive near the Brooklyn Bridge when his car stalled.

The New York Times

Mr. Zuccotti got out, opened the hood and stood looking at the engine—at which point Victor Gotbaum, the labor leader, drove by. Mr. Gotbaum has spent much of the last year arguing with Mr. Zuccotti about the city's layoffs. But he still stopped his car to give the Deputy Mayor a hand.

"What happened to your M.V.O.?" Mr. Gotbaum asked, observing that Mr. Zuccotti's "motor vehicles operator"—the Civil Service designation for a driver—was nowhere in sight.

Mr. Zuccotti explained that his driver had been let go some time back as an economy move. Mr. Gotbaum was unable to resist a comment.

"See how God punishes you?" he said. The two of them eventually got the car started and went their separate ways.

New York Regents Agree to Let Summer Food Plan Run in 1

By LEONARD BUDER

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Dec. 18—New York State education authorities yesterday agreed to administer the Federal Government's $70 million 1977 summer food program for needy children in the state, but called for new controls to eliminate the problems and abuses that marred last summer's program.

The authorities also expressed the hope that the New York City Board of Education would play "a major role" in the program's operation in the city. City school officials have indicated that they would be willing to take part in the program, and perhaps open 131 school centers to feed 111,250 children next summer, provided there would be no cost to the school system.

Informal Assurances Given

The decision to again have the State Education Department manage the summer food program next year was passed by a 6-to-1 vote of the Board of Regents at yesterday's meeting, with seven members abstaining. The Regents said they would reconsider their action in April if the United States Department of Agriculture, which sponsors the food program, did not give state officials here the stronger controls being sought and did not meet other conditions.

Theodore M. Black, chancellor of the Board of Regents, said that the department had been given informal assurances that the Federal Government would go along with the state's conditions. The Regents are asking for better site food-distribution sites, training of personnel involved in the program, and more funds to the state to act and oversee operations.

"I think that the last summer will be a thing of the past, an optimistic about the prospects summer," Mr. Black said.

Last year's Summer Food Program, the first administered by the Education Department, came under attack, with critics charging that the program was riddled with scandal, mismanagement and irregularities that children were frequently served satisfactory and unhealthy food.

The summer program is intended to provide free meals to children of come families as a counter to regular school lunch program from September through June.

In its action today, the Regents stated that in selecting local sponsors for the summer food program, public schools should be given priority.

For New York City, the Regents posed four different plans, under which the City Board of Education act as the primary service institution the city and open up some of its as feeding sites. Other alternatives have the board either responding to the meals directly or into contracts with approved restaurants or vendors.

evolving-Door Teachers Leave a Class Spinning

According to the principal, 31 different teachers have been assigned to P.S. 21 in an effort to fill the positions that were cut this year. Principal and the parents attribute the turnover of the low quality of the teachers they have been assigned by the community school board, which has noted that it is only reacting to what it receives from the central

Dr. C. Arricale 2d, head of the Department of Education's Division of Personnel, said that many white teachers assigned to the predominantly black P.S. 21 complained of harassment and were reassigned pending an investigation, and that this explained part of the problem.

School Called 'Unique'

Public School 21 is unique in the system because of this problem," he also said that this problem did not appear to be at issue in Class 5-304, he said many teachers had only just left the school system

The first teacher to the class this year had not been in a classroom for years, and had returned to her job from being cut from seniority. But eventually she left. A teacher's career had been in teaching retarded, not bright, children. She had barely one hour, the pupils or Mrs. Dudley or Miss Frazier had the longest—between two and three weeks—but the pupils messaged every other teacher in terms of quality.

another teacher "acted as if Mrs. Dudley did not exist," and the pupils at that time, and that led them to rebel against that day the class was interviewed, pupils recalled that they had had string beans, and fruit cocktail. Then the conversation to the order and names of the s they had had.

teacher-turnover problem in Class 5-304 has been such that the class got no report cards in late November. No teacher had been there long enough to judge and grade the pupils.

"If we don't know where we stand, how can we be sure we are learning anything?" asked the vocal and alert Meshauna. "How do we know we are making progress?"

"We are quite upset about the whole thing," said Sylvia Blount, president of the Parent Teachers Association. "No other school in the district has had the kind of turnover we have had. And the kinds of teachers the community school board sends are handicapped incompetent people," she said.

Harold Salley said that his daughter, Harriet, who is in Class 5-304, was "real smart," and that "last year she was doing good, she was happy to come to school."

"Now it seems like you almost have to push her to come to school," he went on. "All I know is that she is not interested. She's only 10. And if that goes on, what's going to happen?"

Nellie Yelverton said her daughter Meshauna "is taking out her problems in the kitchen; she is going weight."

In explaining the turnover problem, Mr. Arricale said that any teacher who refused an assignment to a particular school was automatically dropped.

Mrs. Blount of the P.T.A. said she questioned whether this policy was being implemented.

"We know that people are being reassigned who are not losing their jobs, and no one has responded to our requests for meetings to discuss the teacher-turnover problem," she said, adding that "there is a lot of personal animosity going on."

Adolph Dembo, the community

superintendent, and Marjorie Matthews, president of the community school board, maintain that the turnover problem is not limited to P.S. 21, but that it is districtwide.

However, a request to interview Class 5-304, which Mrs. Blount says holds the district "record" of teacher turnover in a brief period, was denied in a unanimous vote taken at an executive session meeting of the board.

"The community school board does not sanction the interviewing of pupils in school during the school day," its decision read. "The opinions of one group of pupils could not adequately illustrate the scope and intensity of the teacher-turnover problem."

With the approval of their parents, the pupils were interviewed after school on Friday afternoon in a nearby community center.

The conversation constantly came back to Mrs. Dudley, who has gone to work at a publishing house.

"Respect," one pupil said. "She showed it, and we behaved well in the class to show we respected her."

This "respect" was shown in how Mrs. Dudley told them to stand straight in line, "to get good posture," how she told them to dress neatly, and how she made sure the pupils' shoelaces were always properly tied.

"We understood each other," said Conrad Johnson. "She was my friend."

A Lot of Homework

Meshauna said that Mrs. Dudley had "piled it on us" in terms of homework but that now they were getting little homework and that, even when done, it often went unchecked by the teacher. "If this goes on I don't know what's going to happen," she said. "I want to be a doctor. Not a nurse, a doctor."

The class giggled.

"You can laugh, but that's the truth! I'm serious," said Meshauna, who, like all the other pupils, is black.

She said she was "puzzled" because Miss Frazier had been absent three consecutive days. She had a feeling something was wrong.

Shortly after school closed that day, after the interview ended, word came to the principal that Miss Frazier would not be returning to the school at all on Monday.

Republicans in Westchester Seek Candidate Who Can Beat DelBello

By THOMAS P. RONAN
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Dec. 18—Westchester Republicans, who dominated this county for more than half a century, but whose power has been steadily eroded by the Democrats, have begun a talent search.

They are trying to find a candidate who can defeat Alfred B. DelBello, who in 1973 became the first Democrat to be elected County Executive. Mr. DelBello has said he intends to run again next year, and it is thought unlikely he will change his mind unless President-elect Jimmy Carter rewards his early support for the Democratic Presidential nomination with a major job in Washington.

Mr. DelBello, who was Mayor of Yonkers when he ran in 1973, was elected County Executive by only 3,366 votes. But he has been highly active and visible in the office.

Dr. James F. X. O'Rourke, the Republican county chairman, has laid down one qualification for the party nominee, and that is that he should have "instant name recognition."

"It is tough running against an incumbent with someone no one ever heard of," Dr. O'Rourke said. "We would have to put on a saturation media blitz, and that would be extremely costly."

Next Year Crucial for Party

Dr. O'Rourke, an ophthalmologist who is also a former Yonkers Mayor, believes the nominee should be someone who has held public office, elective or appointive. The election next year will be a crucial one for the Republicans, not only because of the DelBello contest, but also because they will be striving to maintain or widen their tenuous control over the County Board of Legislators, whose posts will also be at stake.

They now have a margin of nine to eight on the board. Before the 1975 election of legislators, who have two-year terms, it was 11 to 6. The erosion of Republican power continued in the election last month, when they lost three Assembly seats they had held, and Daniel P. Moynihan became the first Democrat to carry the county for United States Senator.

But the Republican Party carried the county for President Ford in November, and the party won the three countywide contests, for sheriff, county clerk and county judge. It also held the Congressional seat being vacated by Representative Peter A. Feyer and re-elected the four Republican State Senators out of the five who represent Westchester.

Talent Search Started

The latest available enrollment figures gave the Republicans nearly 31,400 more members than the Democrats, less than half their margin 10 years ago. But these figures did not include this year's enrollment, which is expected to show a further drift toward the Democrats.

The talent search for a DelBello opponent began Thursday night, when Dr. O'Rourke met at Republican headquarters here with party leaders from the cities and towns. The leaders had been asked to suggest potential candidates.

Among those whose names were put forward were the three Republican State Senators—Bernard G. Gordon of Peekskill, John E. Flynn of Yonkers and Joseph R. Pisani of New Rochelle.

All would meet Dr. O'Rourke's requirement of being well known, and they could retain their Senate seats while running. But Mr. Pisani has said that he is not interested and that he is "looking in the direction of running for statewide office two years from now."

Mr. Gordon said that "people" had been talking to him about seeking the office, but that he had not "made any determination at the moment."

Mr. Flynn said that he was not looking for the office, but that there had been a lot of pressure on him to run and that the Democrats in one Yonkers ward had already endorsed him.

Others whose names were offered at the meeting were Michael Roth, chairman of the State Liquor Authority, who unsuccessfully sought the nomination in 1973; Charles Pound, a former County Parks Commissioner, and Boine Johnson, a businessman and the Mayor of Scarsdale.

The meeting Thursday was what Dr. O'Rourke called a preliminary skirmish. His executive committee, which comprises three members from each assembly district plus some at-large members and the officers of the party's county organization, will eventually recommend a candidate for County Executive, and the choice will be made at a county convention.

Dr. O'Rourke said he believed Mr. DelBello could be beaten.

Legislative Hearing Scheduled This Week

The remain- ers of the congregation number n two dozen and are all elderly o can no longer afford to keep hey rely heavily on Moses Weis- 5-year-old president of the con- who leads daily prayer services agogue, acts as custodian and ood for his fellow congregants. aking the cake, I'm making the y wife Paula prepares milk and me to bring from our home eople who come to synagogue every morning to pray. But "we need help," said Mr. Weiser, his voice rising to emphasize the urgency of his appeal. "The doors of the synagogue must not close."

A retired butcher with red hair and a small face that becomes luminous when he speaks of Chasam Sopher, Mr. Weiser refuses to abandon the temple in its old age. He has worshiped at Chasam Sopher ever since he came to this country in the 1940's after escaping from a Nazi concentration camp in Poland, where he had been imprisoned for three years.

Morning Prayers in Basement
"My brother Yonah first brought me to this synagogue 30 years ago when it was so crowded you didn't have a place to sit," Mr. Weiser said. "But now only the old people are left."

By "hustling and begging," Mr. Weiser has managed to keep Chasam Sopher functioning over the last few years. It is cold inside the synagogue and even layers of sweaters and tweeds don't keep one from shivering. The morning prayer services are held in the basement.

The upstairs part of the synagogue, where services for the High Holy Days are held, is plain and austere. The stark feeling is heightened by the fluorescent lights that Mr. Weiser's son has wired on the balcony. When it rains, the plastered white walls become wet where they meet the arched windows.

Mr. Weiser arrives at the temple by bus from his home on Grand Street by 8 every morning. The bus driver waits until he has let himself in through the side door. Vandals have robbed Chasam Sopher, many of whose doors and windows are covered with sheet metal, three times.

Among Group Members
At 7:15 A.M., Mr. Weiser leads a group of 10 men wearing prayer shawls and phylacteries (headpieces containing parchment with excerpts from the Torah) in prayer. An hour later, the men seat themselves at a long table and hunch over tin plates filled with salad and herring. Mr. Weiser has prepared. There is also whiskey and coffee.

Among the group on a recent morning are 71-year-old Abraham Steiner, 67-year-old Isador Bruckman and 70-year-old Hyman Sussman. Mr. Sussman, whose father, worshipped at Chasam Sopher, is entertaining the group with his ability to give the weekday that any Jewish holiday fell on over the last 100 years.

Mr. Sussman is blind and comes to Chasam Sopher with 72-year-old Nathan Schwartz. "We come," says Mr. Schwartz, "because you get used to the Jewish religion and as you get older you feel you've lost something if you're not here every day at 7."

"Goodbye, kids," Mr. Weiser calls to the men as they leave and he begins to pack up their dishes from the table. When one stops to give him a contribution for a planned Hanukkah party, he bends his short, spiny body into an amiable bow and says, "May my son get married and you and I always live in good health."

New York Acts To Gain Funds For Ailing Poor

By RONALD SULLIVAN

New York State health officials have agreed to ask the Legislature next month to include New York City's municipal hospitals in the state's $14 million Ghetto Medicine program.

The program, enacted in 1968, provides matching state funds to voluntary hospitals for providing medical services to poor patients left uncovered by Medicaid cutbacks. If municipal hospitals are included, they could receive a total of $4 million a year.

Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., president of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation, has persistently contended that the program penalized the municipal hospitals by excluding them. Dr. Holloman said that the city system was the principal provider of medical and hospital care to the poor, regardless of Medicaid eligibility, and that municipal hospitals should share in any state funds allocated toward their care.

The program generated considerable controversy two years ago when the Board of Estimate reluctantly approved the city's 50 percent matching share of the program to the then 30 voluntary hospitals that were included in the funds. At the time, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer and Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin said that some of the voluntary institutions had been diverting funds earmarked for medical care for the poor toward offsetting their overall operating deficits.

Hospitals' Contention

Currently, $11.5 million a year in the $14 million Ghetto Medicine program is spent in voluntary hospitals in New York City.

Municipal hospital officials seeking inclusion of their institutions in the program contended that they faced state cutbacks while being forced to assume the responsibility for providing health care in poor neighborhoods that they were ignored by the private, nonprofit voluntary hospitals.

The city's dissatisfaction with the municipal hospitals' exclusion from the program became a major source of antagonism between the hospitals agency and the State Department of Health. One argument advanced by the corporation was that the ambulatory-care deficit of the municipal hospitals exceeded $120 million last year, with no help from the state's Ghetto Medicine program.

Accordingly, state health officials met with Dr. Holloman on Nov. 24 and told him that they would recommend to the Legislature next year that the program be revised to include the municipal system. According to state officials, the proposed revision does not face any substantial legislative opposition.

Dr. Holloman said in an interview last week that he "welcomed" the change of policy to meet what he called "the just needs of the municipal hospital system."

Apartment Fire on West 55th St. Kills Woman and Injures 2 Others

A woman resident of 150 West 55th Street, near Seventh Avenue, was fatally injured in a fire that caused heavy damage to her living room Friday evening, the Fire and Police Departments reported. The victim, age unknown, died at Roosevelt Hospital, officials said.

Authorities said the fire was confined to the third-floor apartment but that two other persons also suffered injuries. They were identified as a tenant from the fourth floor, Eve Taylor, and Lester Morgan, age unknown.

Marshall Grace, chief of the Denver bureau of the National Weather Service, said that the dry autumn had occurred because the "storm track" from the Pacific Ocean had shifted northward into Canada from its normal west-to-east pattern. "There's no regularity to this," said Grace, declining to predict when the rains might pass over the ski terrain in the area.

Connecticut Loses $15 Million

HARTFORD (AP)—Cigarette taxes will cost Connecticut $15 million a year, according to state officials. The state said tax-evasion operations would reduce the $90.7 million the state should receive in cigarette taxes to $75.6 million. Connecticut's 21-cent-a-pack cigarette tax is the nation's highest.

Town of 1,200 Votes Restrictions On Real Estate Tax Exemptions

By HAROLD FABER
Special to The New York Times

ANCRAM, N.Y., Dec. 18—This small Columbia County town has voted to bar real estate tax exemptions for 13 categories of nonprofit organizations that heretofore were eligible for tax relief.

Clipping the financial hardships on local governments because of the growth of tax-exempt property, the town voted to limit exemptions to charitable, educational, moral or mental-improvement and cemetery organizations.

It voted to impose taxes, effective Jan.
1, on groups organized for Bible, tract, benevolent missionary, infirmity, public playground, scientific, bar association, medical society, library, patriotic or historical purposes or for the enforcement of laws relating to animals and children.

Members of the board said it had authority to levy the taxes on some categories of nonprofit organizations under the provisions of Section 421 of the State Real Property Tax Law.

Currently, there are no organizations in the new taxable categories within the town. However, town officials said they were concerned about the growth of tax-exempt organizations and what might happen in the future.

State Action Sought
In its action, the board took a different approach to the problem of tax exemptions than in the Town of Hardenburgh, where hundreds of residents were recently ordained as ministers of the Universal Life Church to qualify for tax exemptions.

Both approaches, aimed at calling for state action to change the tax laws, have underscored the financial difficulties that small municipalities throughout the state are having with rising tax exemptions, which have put additional burdens on the taxpayers.

In Albany, it was reported that the law had been used before—particularly in New York City, where both the bar association and the American Bible Society were ruled to be taxable under the new local exemption.

statute, which was upheld by the Court of Appeals.

The State Board of Equalization and Assessment, according to a spokesman, is preparing legislation to present to the State Legislature to give a more narrow definition of religious, educational and charitable organizations, which may help some of those who have to make determinations for tax purposes.

Like Hardenburgh, Ancram is a most unlikely focus for attention about taxation disputes involving constitutional rights that might require resolution by the United States Supreme Court.

Tax-Exempt Properties Cited Ancram is a dairy farming area in southern Columbia County in the foothills of the Berkshire Mountains. The town covers 41 square miles—about the area of the Bronx—with a population of 1,200, a total assessed valuation of $350,000 and tax-exempt property assessed at about $75,000.

Its tax-exempt properties include two churches, one firehouse, one camp for the elderly run by a charitable organization, part of the Taconic State Park and one 300-acre parcel owned by the New York Friends, which received tax exemption this year because of a program of agricultural research.

The immediate cause of the town's action was a report that the owner of 2,000 acres was planning to transfer it to a tax-exempt organization, according to Kenneth Hamm, Supervisor of Ancram.
Mr. Hamm said that it would be up to the town's three-man, part-time Board of Assessors to determine whether any organization was tax-exempt.

"The burden of proof will be on an organization that claims that it is tax-exempt," said Andrew Baldwin, the Town Attorney. He added, however, that if an organization had a tax-exempt certificate from the Internal Revenue Service or from the state, "it would be 99 percent sure of local exemption."

Social Scientists Examining the Changing Character of Brooklyn

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

Brooklyn, once home to a predominantly white population, is in the midst of a vast shift in color and character.

Since the 1950's, the borough, with a white population of more than 90 percent, has become increasingly black and Puerto Rican. The white population is now 60 percent and declining. Bedford-Stuyvesant is the largest black ghetto in the nation, with a population of nearly 400,000 blacks.

These were some of the changes that were discussed by a group of social scientists during a two-day seminar at Brooklyn College last week on Brooklyn's life and future.

Still Most Populous Borough

There are as many blacks and Puerto Ricans in Brooklyn today — nearly one million out of a population of 2.4 million — as there were Jews in the borough in the late 1950's. Economically, the number of jobs available in the borough, which, were it a city, would be the fourth largest in the nation — fell from one million in 1960 to 817,000 in 1976.

Ron Miller, an associate professor in Brooklyn College's sociology department, told a group of some 200 persons attending the seminar that Brooklyn's population, while still the largest of the boroughs in the city, had declined to its 1930's level. The latest census estimates give the borough a population of 2.4 million. At its most populous, in 1950, 2.7 million people lived in Brooklyn, Professor Miller said.

Much of the decline was due to the exodus of Jews. According to census reports, in 1957 Brooklyn was home to 903,000 Jews and, while its Jewish population is still the largest in the city, by 1970 it had lost 385,000, or 43 percent of its Jews to Queens, Long Island, Staten Island and Miami.

While Jews migrated, blacks and Puerto Ricans, some poor, some middle class, most seeking a better way of life, moved to Brooklyn. Many are new arrivals from Haiti.

Brooklyn had for decades attracted the upward mobile among the city's poor. Fifty and 60 years ago, Jews who had clustered on the Lower East Side since their immigration, sought sunshine and space in Flatbush, Boro Park, East New York and Brownsville.

Professor Miller said that in 1950, blacks and Puerto Ricans accounted for 11 percent of Brooklyn's population. By 1960 that number had risen to 21 percent and by 1970 it had jumped to 36 percent. A 1976 estimate is about 39 percent. Several speakers referred to a study by Peter Salins, a colleague at Hunter College, who has predicted that Brooklyn's black and Puerto Rican population will have soared to 72.4 percent by the year 2000. Nonetheless, the borough will remain primarily middle class, he says.

What is new in this latest migration, Professor Miller and others noted, was that unlike their predecessors, the Irish, the Germans, the Italians and the Jews, who became the borough's working and middle class citizens, many blacks and Puerto Ricans had arrived at a time when Brooklyn was not expanding economically.

Dr. Harold X. Connolly, the author of "A Ghetto Grows in Brooklyn" has studied the 10 major poverty areas in the borough and painted a gloomy picture of black economic life. He predicted there was little hope for Brooklyn if its residents could not find jobs.

While he praised the efforts of some groups, particularly the Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Corporation and the International Business Machines Corporation, which has opened a computer cable factory in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Dr. Connolly said no number of training programs could alter the reality that there were simply "too few jobs for the poor."

Bedford-Stuyvesant, once a white area in central Brooklyn, is now 79 percent black, 19 percent Puerto Rican and 2 percent "others." Many black families are middle class. The Puerto Rican population tends to surround Bedford-Stuyvesant "like a doughnut," said Prof. James Beshers of the Queens College sociology department.

Within the black ghettos, Dr. Connolly said, one-fourth of black Brooklyn lives below survival definitions. Put another way, only 40 percent of Brooklyn blacks meet the standards of the middle class, that is, a family earning $8,000, in 1970.

More than one-third of all black Brooklyn families were headed by females more than one-fourth received welfare assistance in 1969. That number is 18 now.

Several speakers spoke nostalgically of old Brooklyn, the once-dynamic Brooklyn Navy Yard, the once-thriving and no-nonsense breweries of Brooklyn, the fabulous Coney Island Amusement, the once-beloved Dodgers, the local Brooklyn Eagle.

Thread of Hope

Despite a general dismay over it of some of these institutions, a thread of hope ran through the two days.

"We have made a start," said F. Hayes, Brooklyn's deputy Mayor, who appeared to stand to be among those who "used" in Brooklyn.

The borough, he said, needed things, but above all, he said, "it" needed leadership to make it about."

RETIRING DETECTIVE CHIEF GETS CITY HALL SENDOFF

After 35 years on the police force, Louis C. Cottell, the Police Department's 62-year-old chief of detectives, retired Friday.

But before he could clean out his desk on the 13th floor of Police Headquarters, he was summoned to City Hall, where, flanked by Police Commissioner Michael

J. Codd and First Deputy Comm James M. Taylor, he was then Mayor Beame for his years of service.

Chief Cottell, who headed the lives under two Mayors and three Commissioners, then returned to his office, where he found a large crowd of the city's law enforcement waiting to bid him farewell. H. Elinore, helped him cut a large cake, decorated with red, white and blue. Deputy Chief Martin E. J. Duff, acting chief of detectives.

Erté Recalls the Glamour of His Art

By FLORA LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

PARIS—When Romain de Tiroff arrived in Paris at age 18, despite his family's outraged objections, he managed to get a designer's job at what he now calls a "thoroughly second-rate fashion house" named Caroline.

After a month or two, the head of the house called him in and said: "Do whatever you want in life except try to draw. You have absolutely no talent for it."

That was in 1910. Now, just after his 84th birthday, Romain de Tiroff's long and vividly successful career under the name of Erté, the French pronunciation of his initials, has been further adorned by the French Government with the title of "Officer of Arts and Letters."

Befitting a man who made glamour the stuff of life, the ceremony was held at Maxim's and the medal was presented by Zizi Jeanmaire, the sophisticated dancer he has often costumed. Erté himself, sprightly, chipper and beaming as usual, outdid even Zizi in extravagance, with his gold chains and bracelets, his gold and pearl pins, his velvet suit and his trimly tailored pastel mink coat.

A Dancer to Remember: Mata Hari
The next day, at the Proscenium Gallery in the Rue de Sevres, which is showing an assortment of his drawings, costumes and scenery designs from his 1920-30 period, he reminisced about how it all happened. It was a story of more than half a century of the glitter and fairy-tale sparkle of life.

His first big chance in the theater, which has absorbed him ever since, was the costume he designed for an exotic young dancer named Mata Hari, in the hit show "The Minaret," in 1913. Erté does not remember the costume precisely; it had to do with scarves and veils, he said. But he does remember the dancer. "She pretended to be a Hindu, although she was completely Dutch," he said.

"She was one of those people who invented themselves, a mythomane. There was nothing in that espionage business. If she'd been willing to defend herself and speak openly, the case would have been dismissed." Mata Hari was executed during World War I as a German spy, after a dramatic trial.

On the other hand, Erté invents only decorative visions. The most memorable occasion of his life, he said, with sound satisfaction, came when he arrived in New York in 1967 to see how a forthcoming exhibition of his work was being hung.

The Young Cluster to Him

"There were red dots everywhere, on every picture," he said, eyes shining with the artist's special pleasure at the symbol of a sale—the red dot. "The Metropolitan Museum had bought every one, 167 pieces—the most they ever acquired of a living artist."

Here in Paris a procession of customers, getting him to autograph his latest book of drawings or the poster for his new show, interrupted his nostalgia. A young German woman told him: "I'm doing theater costumes, too. I've learned a lot from you."

A French student, expressing admiration, said he was doing record-album covers. "I've done them too," Erté said, with delight. "Good luck!"

And then he went back to the beginning of his story. He was born in St. Petersburg to a family whose men had been in the Czar's navy ever since it was founded by Peter the Great, and every one of them had ended his career as an admiral.

A Passport to Enchantment

The same was expected of Romain de Tiroff. His mother gave him a box of watercolors when he was 4 years old. When he was 6 or 7, she amused herself and her friends by ordering a ball gown run up from the romantic drawing her son had made for her.

Since Romain was a slight youth, taking after his tiny mother rather than his towering father, the family even indulged his interest in ballet classes with the daughter of the great Marius Petipa; it was good physical training. But the navy was supposed to be his life.

At 18, he passed his baccalaureate exams with brilliance, and his father asked what he would like as a reward. "A passport," said Romain. It was a family scandal, but Admiral de Tiroff was a man of his word, and, if regretfully, he allowed his son to go to the Paris that had been the boy's dream since he visited the 1900 exposition there with his mother.

"To a child, it was sheer enchantment," he says now. "There were the first illuminated fountains, there was Loie Fuller with her butterfly and fire dances; I fell in love with it."

Through revolutions, wars and occupations, the disappointments and troubles of nearly a century, somehow the world for Erté is still a place of unceasing wonder and delight, to be imagined and caught in decorative art. "I couldn't live without drawing," he said. "I love to invent." It has to be supposed that he, too, has never changed, a Peter Pan of shimmering fantasy.

The luxuriant hair is white now, carefully combed and parted, and the teeth are a bit stained with age. But he has a slim, lithe figure, kept wiry by 20 minutes of yoga exercises done faithfully every morning since his father taught them to him when Romain was 7. His body today could be a teenager's.

Bohemia to Bois de Boulogne

When he first came to Paris, he unwittingly stayed in a prostitutes' hotel for a while "because it was the cleanest I could find," but then he moved out of the Bohemian neighborhoods to be near the Bois de Boulogne as soon as he could afford an apartment.

He still lives in that area, on the top floor of a fairly modern building, with an aquarium full of tropical fish built into one wall and a huge glass aviary with doves replacing another wall. It is a kind of set by Erté, full of jewel tones and fun and light. The wooden panels that enclose his bar are autographed by half a century of friends, some world-famous, some just friends.

"I hate pretension; I can't get along with pretentious people," he said, recalling the one time he ever had a quarrel with a member of the parade of stars and beauties he dressed. Lillian Gish, during one of his Hollywood periods, was to be Mimi, in "La Bohème." "A poor girl, so I made costumes of cottons and woolsens," Erté recalled.

"But Miss Gish screamed in outrage. She said, 'I act with my whole body, and I can only stand silks on my skin.'"

No Hooray for Hollywood

So Erté told her quietly to get somebody else to make her dresses, and went ahead with the costumes for Musette, played by Renée Adorée. He also dressed Norma Shearer and Carmel Mayer and many others, but although Louis B. Mayer of M-G-M personally signed him on for three successive contracts, no movie for which he was a designer was ever produced.

"There wasn't any script," Erté said, "but they told me to go ahead and make the designs and they would write a script to fit them. It was hopeless and took forever. I wasn't allowed to do any other work by the contract, and I got bored, so I left and went back to do shows for George White and Ziegfeld in New York."

Erté with Isobel Estorick, the young actress whom the designer virtually made the embodiment of glamour

One of the unproduced set designs, a gorgeous golden and leopard-skinned dining room representing part of the home of a fashionable courtesier in the unmade film, was in his latest exposition. Erté laughed at its frivolous pomposity. It reminded him:

"I once used a mile and a quarter of gold lamé for a Folies Bergères show. It formed a sort of semicircle of curtain and then came down and draped around the girls."

In 1910 the disastrous head of Caroline's threw all his designs in the waste basket. When she dismissed him, she allowed him to gather them up and take them with him. He sent them to Paul Poiret, then the idol of Paris fashion, and was put on contract the next day. It was through Poiret that he was commissioned to do the Mata Hari costume.

After that he drew for Vogue and Harper's Bazaar, for the theater and rich women and for pleasure. The idea for his elaborate alphabet-and-number set the master series, now being lithographed, came from his childhood. "When I was learning to write," he said, "I thought of it as a kind of drawing. It amused me to make the letters in fancy ways, and I guess I came to think of the human body as a pliable part of a design in Maria Petipa's ballet class."

Unisex? Yes, If Exciting

Erté's art deco style is back in vogue again, which pleases him, of course, but he also welcomes the mode retro, the return to the Twenties, for the lively fun of it. "I hate uniforms and dull colors," he said. "Blue jeans and mustards and browns and khakis are awful.

There's more variety again in colors. I love yellows and red fire colors."

He has nothing against uniforms, providing they are exciting, designed some for himself and Estorick, the young actress sister of his New York dealer, Sel Estorick, and in the process redesigned a somewhat lugger into the very embodiment of glamour.

He has done sculpture, intricate pieces, and jewelry, lavishly bright, and he designs evening sort clothes for himself.

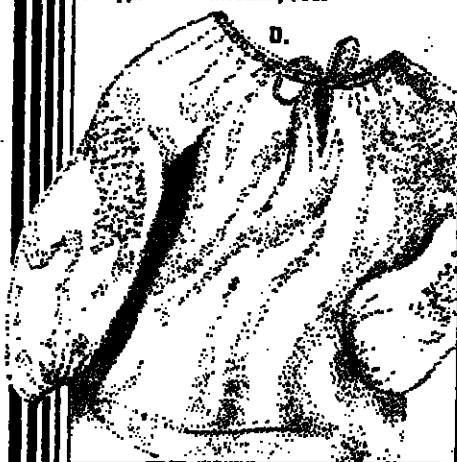

"Satin and velvets are best," he said, with a chuckle, "and done a white piqué suit for (where he spends a month each with the Estoricks)."

The little blue rosette that his new medal is the most me of his outfit. It shows, however, the master of decoration has decorated, too.

LESTER LANIN AT THE TIFFANY BALL

Some institutions, such as Tiffany and Lester Lanin are timeless. These two stalwarts have been turning up at the best private and public parties for about as long as anyone cares to remember.

Now, at the flood tide of nostalgia, we have decided to re-issue a 44-song disc of Lester Lanin and his orchestra that was recorded live at The Tiffany Ball in Newport on July 13, 1957.

Golden oldies abound, from Smoke Gets In Your Eyes to Just In Time, not to mention those foot tappers, Twelfth Street Rag and something called The Wang Wang Blues.

Shall We Dance?

Lester Lanin At The Tiffany Ball is available at all Tiffany Stores, $6.

Law Student Plans to Wed Susan Welsh

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Corbett Welsh of Camp Hill, Pa., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Susan Jane Welsh, to William S. Eakins Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Eakins of Glen Cove, L.I. A wedding in January is planned.

The future bride, the executive director of the 1890 House Museum, Cortland, N.Y., was graduated from Stone Ridge, Convent of the Sacred Heart, Washington, and Bryn Mawr College. She studied at the University of Delaware, where she was a Hagley Fellow.

She is a granddaughter of Mrs. Arthur B. Welsh of Washington, and the late Col. Arthur Brinkley Welsh, Medical Corps, U.S.A., retired.

Her father, director of the Bureau of Museums, Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission in Harrisburg, is former director of the New York State Historical Association, Cooperstown, and was earlier assistant to the director general of museums at the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. Eakins, a third-year student at the Cornell University Law School, was graduated from the Green Vale and Hotchkiss Schools and Yale. His father is the retired vice president of J. S. & W. R. Eakins Inc., a manufacturer of pigments, now a division of the Chemetron Corporation.

Ashby Gore Planning Marriage in England

Mrs. Donald Thomas Oakes of Ontario Park, Tannersville, N.Y., and Henry Gore Jr. of Washington and Potomac, Md., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Beverly Ashby Gore, to David Charles Godfrey-Thomas, son of the Rev. and Mrs. Cecil Stephens Godfrey Godfrey-Thomas of Malden, England.

Miss Gore, known as Ashby, and her fiancé plan to be married in England on Jan. 22.

Mr. Gore is executive director of Gore Properties, a family real estate investment company in Washington, which owns, among other property, the Fairfax Hotel. Her stepfather is headmaster of the Hall School in Pittsfield, Mass.

Mr. Godfrey-Thomas is an associate with the London insurance concern E. C. Darwin Clayton & Company Ltd. His father is an Anglican priest.

Miss Gore attended the Holton Arms School in Bethesda, Md., and graduated from Miss Hall's School and Pine Manor Junior College. She is studying with the Maria Montessori Program in London. Mr. Godfrey-Thomas attended the Felsted School in Essex, England.

Gail O'Leary Bride Of J. D. Macdonald

Gail Susan O'Leary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald P. O'Leary of Wyckoff, N.J., was married yesterday afternoon in New York to James D. Macdonald, executive vice president of Hydron Europe in Wokingham, England, a division of the National Patent Development Corporation of New York.

Mrs. James Wilders performed the ceremony and celebrated the nuptial mass in the Roman Catholic Church of St. Thomas More. Mrs. Michael Ort and Valerie O'Leary were honor attendants for their sister, Joseph W. Kaempfer was best man.

The bride, an alumna of the Briarcliff School in Hicksville, L.I., attended Fordham University and Manhattan College. She is a former administrative assistant to the president of National Patent Development. Her father is a merchandising manager for the Flitkote Company.

Mr. Macdonald graduated from the University of Illinois and the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. A former major with the Fifth Special Forces Group, he saw service in Vietnam, Thailand and Germany. He is the son of Mrs. John R. Macdonald of LaGrange, Ill., and the late Mr. Macdonald, a concert baritone.

The couple will live in Sonning, England.

Paul Terence Schubert Marries Gail Campbell

Gail Maurin Campbell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Campbell Jr. of Short Hills, N.J., was married there yesterday to Paul Terence Schubert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Schubert of Freeport, L.I. The Rev. Alfred M. Niese Jr. performed the ceremony in Christ Episcopal Church.

Leigh Campbell was maid of honor for her sister. Other attendants were Moira Campbell, also a sister of the bride, Karen Kafer and Amy Shin. The bridegroom's father served as best man.

The bride, a licensed practical nurse, graduated from the East Place School and from the Mira Costa College Nursing School in Vista, Calif. She studied also at Ithaca College. Her father is president of Investors Security Services Inc. in East Orange, N.J.

Mr. Schubert attended the State University College at Plattsburgh. His father is vice president and editorial director of the Industrial Press in New York.

The Philharmonic—A Troubled Giant Facing Change

Circus band playing—especially drum rolls—is a favorite hobby for the Philharmonic's percussionist Buster Batty.

Trombone players in the brass section—'If the Chicago Symphony is a Cadillac, the Philharmonic is a Mack truck.'

Violinist Hanna Lachert, a soloist in Poland, concertmistress in other orchestras, plays second violin in the Philharmonic.

Superstar first cellist, Lorne Munroe, center, frequently appears with the Philharmonic in a solo capacity.

Before 1962, women in the orchestra only played the harp. Today there are nine women in the Philharmonic ranks.

First desk mates Julius Baker, flute, and Harold Gomberg, oboe, have long been solo players with the orchestra.

Between now and next May, reads a recent Stagebill of the New York Philharmonic, "the orchestra in well over 100 subscription and rehearsal concerts, will present an imposing array of conductors, a mention music covering a logical span of three centuries." The typographical error recently spoke much truth, that if Stagebill quickly became a col's item among the men and women who comprise America's oldest and most famous orchestra.

But, of course, there is another side to the Philharmonic story. When the orchestra held auditions for a new trumpet player recently, 62 musicians played but none was selected. The point is simply that the Philharmonic—one of the outstanding symphony orchestras in the nation and indeed the world—would rather do without than make do with what it regards as mediocrity.

Festering resentment and the relentless pursuit of excellence are among the contradictions at the Philharmonic today.

After 14 years of struggling with what gradually came to be recognized as poor acoustics in its home in Lincoln Center, Avery Fisher Hall has now been acoustically remodeled at enormous cost and inconvenience. And the Philharmonic's music director, Pierre Boulez, has announced that this season will be his last. There will be no one at the helm next season, and in 1978, the discreet, scholarly and reticent Maestro Boulez will be succeeded by Zubin Mehta, the flamboyant, Indian-born conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

The impact of other, less-visible changes is being felt as well. Over the last 20 years, Philharmonic members have moved from a 30-week contract at a $5,000 minimum salary to guaranteed year-round employment at five times that figure. In order to meet their payroll as well as other rising costs, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society has in the same period increased its budget from one to seven million dollars (of which the orchestra members receive between 45 and 50 percent) and widened the scope of Philharmonic activities to help generate income. The orchestra's work load now includes performances classified as subscription, Ring, Promenades, educational, Young People's Parks, Prospective Encounters, tours, festivals, recording sessions, "Live from Lincoln Center," and weekly radio broadcasts that are heard in 49 states. Last year, 960,000 people heard them live and their broadcast audience was estimated in the millions. This proliferation of activity has put a strain on Philharmonic members, who are increasingly uneasy in their triple identities of artists, employees and union members. Like orchestra musicians throughout the country, they complain of stress, overwork, and a decline in their ability to derive artistic satisfaction from their playing. But in addition, they have a list of complaints linked to their special location. They resent New York critics for regularly comparing them to visiting orchestras which have been painstakingly groomed for appearances in this city while the New York Philharmonic churns out a new program each week with a minimum of rehearsal time.

Baryshnikov Tries His Hand At Choreography

By JOHN GRUEN

When American Ballet Theater unveils its new, full-length production of "The Nutcracker" next evening at Kennedy Center, in Washington, D.C., will mark the dancer's ut as a choreographer. Baryshnikov's "Nutcracker," with sets by is Aronson and 131 costumes created by Frank Thompson, will be radically different in concept from re familiar versions, including George Balanchine's gely popular production annually by The New York City Ballet. Although w Yorkers will not see a new version of the hollywood classic until American Ballet Theater's ring season, when the work will receive its New York premiere at the Metropolitan Opera, watching Baryshnikov rehearsing his very first choreographic effort provided an unusual and fascinating glimpse into the dancer's working methods.

In his new role as choreographer, Baryshnikov will be following in the steps of his fellow Kirov defectors, Rudolf Nureyev and Natalia Makarova, both of whom made their choreographic debuts in the West—Nureyev, with his own full-length productions of "The Nutcracker," "The Sleeping Beauty" and "Raymonda," among others, and Makarova, with her recent staging of "La Bayadere," for American Ballet Theater.

"I have only one life to live, and I must try everything," said 28-year-old Baryshnikov, during a recent "Nutcracker" rehearsal at the American Ballet Theater School. "Actually, it never occurred to me to start

Baryshnikov rehearsing with Marianna Tcherkassky—"Stop it, stop it! The structure isn't right. I don't want it to look like 'Sleeping Beauty'!"

Kong Speaks: Thoughts of A Private Ape

King Kong is something special and he knows it, so when he comes to New York to promote "King Kong," the $25,000,000 remake of his 1933 picture that opened this week, he asks for and gets the star treatment. He lays down rules. His press representative, a slight, nervous man, has at first demanded that I submit a list of questions to Kong in advance as well as allow Kong the right to check my copy. Both requests were turned down, though I compromised to the extent of telling the spokesperson some of the general topics I'd like to cover. "Just don't go into his private life," said the spokesperson. "He won't talk about Christian Science, Mae West, Doris Day or politics. He's a very private ape."

Kong has never before gone out to beat the drums for a film so this event in itself is news whether or not he says anything of interest. When the man on the Plaza reception desk passes me on up to Kong's 10th floor suite that overlooks the park as well as the fountain where Zelda and Scott once frolicked, I feel as queasy as I did some years ago when I was on my way to interview the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. Again I'm about to collide with history. The Duke, however, was an ex-king. Kong still has his title.

The door is finally opened by the spokesperson, whom I'll call Ted for anonymity's sake and Ted looks stricken.

Never Mind the Echoes, Listen To Williams

Someone should notice a set of exercises for clearing our heads of echoes before entering a theater, particularly nowadays — before entering a theater housing yet one more revival of a Tennessee Williams play. Mr. Williams' work has been so much with us for so long that it has sometimes seemed to set foot in the city without leaving its "Car at Bird" or "Streetcar" or one or another variation under and smoke and our constant exposure and sure to the playwright's rhythms, people and themes in us a good bit of echoes, baggage to carry along.

But in the sense that it gets in the way of setting down completely, attentively and with innocence before the latest exhibit offered us, that actor Richard Chamberlain shiver and perspire the "unbearable torments" that have driven him to the "unbearable" in "Circle in the Square" the new of "This Night of the Ignominy," we feel that we before this fugitive from the world of predatory Baptist schoolteachers, and a "sensitive delinquent" of As we hear Dorothy McGuire, a spinster under charge of her 57-year-old grandfather, explain that the old man is a minor poet of some quality, first book was issued in the day of the 1930s, "Grand President," we know that the long, rippling roll of "S. Grant" and the full Southern pronunciation of "President" are rhythms that Blanche Dubois and her mother — and oh, how many fastidious heroines — used and used. Attending to the misanthropic and they try to forge a common philosophic ground in proposition that nothing truly human is degrading as it is unkind or violent, we nod ever so sagely and that theme again.

we are doing exactly the wrong thing. We remember a play instead of letting Williams write we could clear our heads, if we could simply look hatched into the waterfront clearing and see the boundaries of a new world in which the might happen, we'd be open to a discovery. I at, about a third of the way through the first of two acts, I came to with a start, shook away the clutter of years and add sharply to myself how, consistently, Tennessee Williams is of course each play bears his signature, with its identifying language tags. And each play, though something touches something either subtle or obvious that hasn't yielded to earlier probing. Once we have surrendered our preconceptions and begun to listen for what is this language different — for instance, that spinster Hannah looking for Williams, an entirely new kind of woman — a thoroughly strong woman who is not a bully. Most of Williams' characters show some strength indeed; but they are highly vulnerable to master the fates. The few with a talent for mastery — Maggie the Cat, let's say — tend to be misanthropic, spiny creatures who hurt until they are hurt in return.

But Williams' strength is a straightforward strength, all composed, candor, directness, grace. The outcast and fevered misanthropes, observing the efficiency with which she manipulates her small universe, stare at her in disbelief, then pay her the compliment due her. "You are a fantastic, cool mother," he says with shy but genuine admiration. No bully, though she is a little bit and cannot possibly afford to lose her position, even in his primitive hotel as the Costa Verde, she is a woman who has learned simply, calmly, and with a certain grace, to control the situation. Williams' strength is far grander than this. It is the strength of a poet, while she sketches her characters, she is thinking, truthfully, to press herself to the limit of her craft and make her work available to the maximum number of people. It is already helping us to understand, though we are asked to, though no one's willing to take her as a payment for anything. She moves in a self-contained, quiet, placid but with a steely power that cannot quite be challenged.

Williams' power is not with great charm and intelligence. She is not quite so well cast in it as Margaret Leighton once was. Leighton was physically fragile, almost, more to the point, and the contrast between her and the world she lived in made for a greater complexity, greater surprise, we were confronted with an unbreakable woman, Miss McGuire, looking her very best, is by nature still a woman, resilient. But she is not an actress to overlook her limitations, and the judges of Mr. Williams' benevolent vagabond, surviving in a strange universe by "drawing to inside strength" — a warm, subtle, amusing and indomitable survivor.

Warm when she is showing an interest in scandal, as any woman might. Amusing when she is carefully introducing the dimmy Mr. Chamberlain to her grandfather as "a man of God — on vacation." And subtle when she is imperceptibly blending humor with a reflective, deeply concentrated, understanding. The actress has a lengthy passage in the play's second half in which she chooses to speak openly of her own sexual experiences to the man who is on the run from sex-as-sin, sex as forbidden by a once-praying mother and by that Oblivious Majesty he formerly Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice, whose "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" starts Wednesday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Before 'Superstar,' There Was 'Joseph'

By JUDITH WEINRAUB

Will Eva Peron be the next superstar? An unlikely choice, but Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber, the creators of "Jesus Christ Superstar," the most successful British musical of the 70's, are counting on it.

Six years ago, when they were respectively 22 and 26, Rice and Lloyd Webber rocked the musical theater with "Superstar." Since then they have become rich, famous, and very cautious.

"It was no secret that we didn't like the Broadway production of 'Superstar,'" said Lloyd Webber recently at his apartment on East 42nd Street, in the heart of Uptown-Downtown country. "The London production was much simpler. The proof is in the pudding. It's still running after five years."

"Evita," which so far has been produced only as a two-record album released here by MCA last month, is their first collaboration since then. It is based on the life of Juan Peron's second wife, Eva.

"We were fascinated by the two sides of Eva," said Lloyd Webber. "There was the public face, which she used to attract and reassure the people. She even turned on the Jody Garlands, calling herself the Rainbow of Argentina. And then there was the private face — what she really felt behind the scenes." The other side of this enigmatic figure who veered between show business and totalitarianism was, Lloyd Webber indicates, ruthless, manipulative, and even more power-hungry than Peron himself.

As the "Evita" album is getting enthusiastic reviews in London, the team's first success, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," is about to be staged at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The limited engagement begins Wednesday and runs through Jan. 9, and the production is being directed by Frank Dunlop. Cleve Little will star as the Narrator.

The musical, dealing with the Biblical story of Joseph ("It's straight out of Genesis," says Tim Rice), may turn out to be their most popular show. When originally produced in London in 1968, "Joseph" launched their career together and, most important, led them to their discovery — almost by accident — of a new musical form which they took even further in "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Evita."

"We realized with 'Joseph' that it was possible to put together something continuous without a narrative line, without that ghastly moment when the violins are lifted, and the dialogue stops," said Lloyd Webber. "Without realizing it at first, we found that you could switch styles crazily throughout the whole thing, mixing up musical comedy numbers with calypso, country and western and Elvis Presley. And the basic story is such a good plot. It's been extraordinarily successful. It's

Vinnette Carroll Is Still In There Swinging

By CLIFFORD MASON

Vinnette Carroll, a multi-talented woman of the theater who was nominated for a Tony in 1972, has a striking number of credits. She has trained scores of actors who have gone on to become successes in their own right (Cicely Tyson, Sherman Hemsley, Calvin Lockhart, Jonelle Allen). She's kept her Urban Arts Corps alive for nine years with a patchwork of meager grants. She's been successful as a developer of dozens of scripts. And this Wednesday, "Your Arms Too Short to Box With God," which will open at the Lyceum Theater, will become her second Broadway show in four years. Indeed, the show could earn more than a million dollars, like its predecessor, "Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope." But still Miss Carroll has trouble paying the rent for her theater, and still she does not feel free to pursue the theatrical projects which interest her most.

Her new show got its start when the Italian Government commissioned her to write a gospel play for the Spoleto Festival of 1975. She brought the play back to New York after playing six successful weeks in Italy, and presented it at her Urban Arts Corps, a permanent foundation-supported theater on West 20th Street in Manhattan, that she calls home. That's where Frankie Hewitt, the show's producer, saw it and took it to Washington, D.C., and later to Chicago and Philadelphia.

During a recent interview, I asked Miss Carroll about the new work. "It's the Christ story," she said, "done with an all-black cast."

Q: Is it like "Godspell" or "Jesus Christ Superstar"?

A: I didn't even see "Godspell" until I'd finished it.

Q: But it is another black version of a white story?

A: Well, not consciously, it isn't. I was just taking the Easter music and drawing on it. We use some traditional gospel and some original work. I started out thinking of Christ as Martin Luther King. You know, as a man who was saying things that people didn't want to hear. But I got away from that. If he isn't Martin Luther King, who is he?

I guess he really does have to be Dr. King, doesn't he? You're playing the psychiatrist for me now.

You've worked this form a lot over the years. Has Vinnette Carroll allowed herself to get into a rut?

I'm anxious to do a straight play. But I do hear music a lot. Sometimes, however, it's incidental, just to underscore a moment.

Why haven't you done more straight plays?

I think it has to do with the nature of the American theater. Musicals are so much more commercial. And I always wind up being taken away from what's really my first choice. Artistically, I've had many successes with non-musicals here at Urban Arts. We did Sartre's "The Flies" and a marvelous version of Irwin Shaw's "Bury the Dead." But it was an anti-war play, an allegory in which men refuse to die. And our timing was bad. We put it on just as Vietnam was over. But the chief reason that I do so many musicals is that white producers won't pick up anything intellectual by us, no matter how good it is. They only want the singing and the dancing. It's where the quick money is.

Isn't there an implied anti-intellectualism in this form of theater that gets by without a book, that whites enjoy seeing blacks do?

There's a simplicity that is really sophisticated in the way that Picasso's simple lines are sophisticated. And there was a time when black audiences were ashamed of having it done out of Harlem. But anyone who looks down on this form shouldn't be dignified with an answer.

Don't you have an obligation to do black plays that don't depend on singing and dancing exclusively?

But I have done them. I did Errol John's "Moon on a Rainbow Shawl." And last year I did "Play Mas" by Mustafa Matura, which deals with the problems of tyranny.

Both of those plays take place in Trinidad?

Vinnette Carroll, left, directs Mabel Robinson and David St. Charles in "Your Arms Too Short to Box With God," opening Wednesday at the Lyceum.

Theater

"Whites are comfortable with us as long as we're on Catfish Row."

Yes, I feel most comfortable. West Indian material that deals universal experiences. Right now looking for a play that deals death.

What about the black America experience and all the angry young and/or middle-aged, abundant in the 60's? What's happened to the passion that was in black in 10 years ago?

It seems to have died for now. I sold out cheaply, in a way. We're more accepted superficially, an black middle class is larger and solvent, so the anger doesn't color our pens as readily. The actors feel it as much. In the 60's we that we had nothing to lose. I think a play like "The Wiz" would work then. We did a black version of "Alice in Wonderland" at City Center—"But Never Jam Today"—in But nobody picked it up.

How did you respond to the pressure of the 60's?

I was at the New York State Center on the Arts getting grants for artists and forming Urban Arts as the black actor could have a place to learn his art and not have to be just being black to get a job. I wanted to establish something permanent went beyond the emotionalism.

And the black American with U.A.C.C.

I did Lindsey Patterson's "Black Poems." And there's a writer in ark, Joe White, who is a fine writer. I've been waiting for him to do a little more so we can work together on a major effort. I'm finally up the musical canvas for awhile, clearly the type of material that I to music and dance. I've turned a ner. I want to work with a writer has a script that I can help him do.

But if the white producers are interested in your musicals, what happen if you're offered an chance to move something that's straight. Will you say no?

I can't afford to, can I? You we hang on by our nails down I've been nominated for a Tony to keep the phone on all the ti have to call Dorothy Rodgers, bless

الليل، ليلة

"Why humor is tricky in ballet—and in opera—is that much of the civilization in the lyric theater is extremely popular."

CLIVE BARNES

the recent cult dance fiascos in New York were "The Spirit of Delishious" at the Roundabout Theater and "Les Ballets Trockadero de Monte Carlo" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The cultist fervor of their audiences—both proved hot dance tickets—is almost as common as the common, for the Frick is totally alien to the Delishious, is approaching the sublime. I wish I had heard a great deal about the Trockadero, but that I would not care for it, and, however, of no particular concern to a serious dancer. However, I was persuaded and went, and was appalled.

Section is not against drag performers, for example, the clever and witty Shogun at the P.F. Pierce. Also, House of the Women played in the concert Off Broadway musical, The Club, in the slightest bit disturbed by the traditions as varied as the English pantomime or Japanese Kabuki Theater.

There are many reasons why male dancers should not. One of the greatest dangers, as in Les Fiches, is the ballet created for Diaghilev, Anton Dolin, person, and, more recently, Frederick Ashton used as a model in "The Dream." If men were to be taken to the point suggested by Peter Aronson, "The Dance of the Drowsy Argonauts," these men, "that if they were taken to it as young would do a better than women." But the effect of the male technique could, possibly, be disastrous.

And, the women's roles are played by men, as suggested in the same interview: "A place perhaps may have been created on a woman, but reason why somebody else can't dance it." Let this a little. Certainly boys acted all the female in Elizabethan stage, and, indeed, some years ago, the National Theater presented an all-male production "As You Like It," some of the sexual ambiguities of Shakespearean theater—such as boys playing girls to impersonate boys—received some fascinating sexual ambiguity, for that matter, if interestingly, referred to in "The Club," where the sexist of a group of Edwardian men, who are being women, take on a special ironic tone. Yet Mr.

Amateur efforts on such nights in general was nothing, such as did Erik Bruhn when he had the Rothbart Ensemble "Swan Lake" played by a woman and identified with the prince's mother.

"What really disturbs me about this Truchadenro troupe, is that it is fundamentally amateurish, the show is strictly a burlesque—the 'bachelors' call themselves 'canine' names such as Olga Tchikobomskaya, and when they started out they obviously all thought they were being something tiny, tiny. Mr. Amatore claims that they are not 'legitimate' improvisators." Well, what are they? I cannot imagine any of them getting a job as a professional dancer.

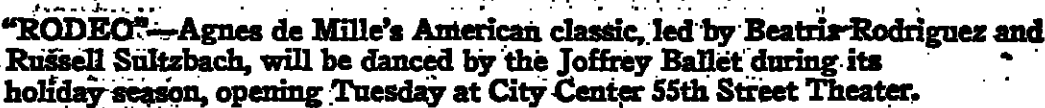

Butter in dance is extraordinarily difficult to produce. Who do you imagine that there are so few, so very few, really good dancers? I can think of Jerome Robbins—"The Cornetist," which is the most brilliant comedy I have recall, has the humor derived from a most sophisticated theatrical mind and is danced by professional dancers. Sometimes simple "milkmaid" work is better than grand revue in which four girls make a fool of themselves. And this Swan pas de quatre from "Swan Lake" which has something often marred by excessive galloping instead of the staccato. At least once.

Mr. Amatore is wrong in ballet—and in opera—is that both of the activities in the lyric theater is extremely facile regarding the possible suspension of disbelief. In the lyric domain, just scribbling about clay hands being frozen in the ice, falling, falling into the same stage and knocking off a scaffold or orchestra instinctively, the uninitiated or poorly educated person, feels a little guilty about this. Ballet in America is still not as fully accepted as it should be, and the opera. Therefore, anyone who laughs at the opera, and gets it in or him or her, is laughed at as appearing to secret fears and prejudices of the average audience.

Amateur dancers have always had certain fears about the continuity of their dances can indulge deliciously in those fears by mocking those first clodhoppers in funny makeup and with camp gestures. It is ridiculous, yet this sort of exploitation of audience prejudice should prove very popular with audiences who know know much about ballet. But it is also dangerous. It is my hope that the National Endowment for the Arts has recently accepted the Truchadenro for its national Dance Touring Program, this would be the first irresponsible action I can ever recall from any American governmental funding agency for the arts.

Now to happier things, the Denishawn program is really a triumph. It is given by Joseph Pilsner's Danscompany, which originally performed the work at the Riverside Church, has been staged by Klarna Pinks, and has been brought most enterprisingly to the Roundabout Theater for a three-week run, which ends tonight.

Time past and time-present are all present in time future—as the poet said. What is especially thrilling about this program, apart from the charm of the dancers and the grave simplicity of the choreography, are the insights it offers into the two great pioneers of American dance, Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, and the Denishawn School they founded. Not only does the program show what happened to Denishaws, but it also shows very clearly where Denishaws came from.

To most of us nowadays, Denishawn is merely a name—the school that gave birth to Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman, and taught a mishmash of styles including odd-oriental, something a little like eurythmics and even a touch of classical ballet. To an extent, this program shows the truth of this. But much more.

Miss Finska was one of the original Denishawn teachers, and has been teaching its repertoire and techniques for more than 40 years. The program, which is in three parts, first shows the basic technique, then a series of music visualizations (which has St. Denis's term for creative choreography) and finally a series aptly called "Orientalia."

The source of all this is very much in keeping with the times. Obviously the interest the Shaws had in Delarte is one thing, the influence of Duncan is another. But the system also perhaps owes something to the influence of Russian ballet (with all its own Duncanism and orientalism) and very much to the spirit of its period, with its new early 20th-century Romanticism, which interestingly coexisted ed with the bitterness of the Jazz Age.

What has happened to Denishawn, this watershed in American dance, is equally fascinating. Watching these exercises and studies—some of which look nowadays as quaintly old-fashioned as faded photographs—one can see where quite a lot of Graham, on the one hand, and Humphrey and José Limón on the other, derive from. There is Graham's use of declarative movement, for example, or her unsketched outlines that emerges even in the curlicues of a wrist gesture, and even in her use of walls and props. There is Humphrey's use of music and Limón's fondness for choreographic counterpoint. Also, Jack Cole employs out-and-out orientalism (half of the "Rites" dances seem to have come from Ruth St. Denis's "Nautch" number). And one thing even more surprising—Jerome Robbins. Robbins was an enthusiastic pupil of Miss Plunka and remains an admirer. He should. There is, and I would never have guessed it in a month of matinees, a strong Denishawn element in Robbins's "piano" works, on a comic level in "The Concert," and more seriously in "Dances at a Gathering." So there it is—time past, time present and time future, all in the spirit of Denishawn.

the bill! Oh, we get money, but so limited in what we can do. We have to be so careful. I need a heater. This one seats only 66.

We can't afford the failures there groups can. We don't get rid of money that Circle in the 10 or Shakespeare Festival get.

you still resent the role the white man has put you in?

sense, yes.

have your working relationships with them?

and bad. "Cope" was a very poor experience. I was glad when socialism with that show was I would never go back to it again.

it was the bad side.

by comparison, my relationship with this show has been quite good.

you still haven't been able to anyone to move a straight place.

You see white people have been segregated into dealing in a paragon with us that they're not even of it. It makes it difficult for artists, to be the people we want that why "Porgy and Bess" can't do things so big as the Orpheus does, it really does. But that white people want. They can't hear the voices we have, and we're comfortable with us as long as we can, Catfish Row. The straight play is almost nonexistent; it may be. Joseph Papp has the only thing we do is an extension of "Porgy and Bess." It's gotten at the black audience so we starved to own images that black people support anything. And if white people won't raise the level of black art, then we have to find black actors who will. The Woodie King, the Ashton-Springers will have a black money into serious black art. That's the only way it's going to happen. The white producer is just businessmen. He has no interest in developing black culture. As Langston has said, "I guess it's going to be us."

the black audience always there. If an actor whose time has come? was always there. But black people no reason to go to the theater before the 1960's. What I'm unhappy it now is that white producers are even bothering to spend the kind money on a black production that spend on a white one. And the sting compromises that they are doing are horrifying. And that's bad the black actor. It makes him learn little for less.

art of, like the old days when a director would hire a black actor to tell him, "Be black!"

served. Her own encounters have been pitiable, but she does not make them painful. She decorates her remembrance of having been molested in a movie theater as a child with a wry stress on the Clara Bow film she'd been seeing and the popcorn she'd brought along. Then, without seeming to alter course, she slips into a rueful account of a pathetic fetishist who once asked a favor of her, a favor she granted, not knowing what else to do. The modulation is gentle, the tale-telling controlled. When Mr. Chamberlain ultimately, angrily, defensively wants to know why she hasn't cracked up along the way—given the sterility and the burdens of her life—the answer is once again effortless. "I didn't want to, I couldn't afford to."

Miss McGuire is also enormously helpful in pointing out one other aspect of her playwright's restlessness, his refusal to write precisely the same play a second time. The dominant symbol that threads itself through the evening seems familiar—and for a time much too obvious—Williams: the spirit that should be free is bound, fettered. An iguana that has been captured by two beach-boys is kept prisoner beneath the hotel veranda. The minister, in the throes of one of his periodic breakdowns, must literally be roped to a wicker chaise longue. And the girl has spent her life, willingly, chained to her grandfather. A hall of mirrors.

Except that Mr. Williams knows perfectly well that this particular theme goes all the way back to his very first play and, rather than echo himself absolutely, he is here engaged in casting doubt, shadow, a cloak of ambiguity over it. While Mr. Chamberlain is thrashing about under his bonds and demanding release because, as he screams, "A man can die of panic," Miss McGuire remains drolly unmoved. "Not if he enjoys it as much as you do," she tells him, going on to point out that there is something a bit voluptuous about his martyrdom and that since there are no nails involved he is really suffering a rather easy crucifixion. The cry for freedom is nicely punctured, and we ask ourselves: what has this man imposed on himself, how much of it is self-dramatization?

The end of the play follows suit, turning fetters and burdens into ambiguous. The iguana is from its rope. The minister has no realistic future leaves his hideout, at least freed of the "spook" that h him. Two victories, of a sort same moment—too patly, it's —Hannah's grandfather con last long poem and dies, fire nah. And the pattern would if this constituted a third vi it doesn't. THIS TIME

Once, many years ago, in a theatre off-Broadway, I tried to give the best performance of my life in a little play about the second coming of Christ. I spared nothing: of myself, the audience or the critics; took every chance and pulled no punches. The New York critics were unanimously brutal in their reaction. The only dissenter was a paper in New Jersey somewhere which called it a fine passion play and the best performance that reviewer had ever seen. The play closed in one night, and I more or less resolved never to live of myself so freely again.

Now, Hal Ashby has given me in "BOUND FOR GLORY" the chance to do exactly as I believe, for once, with no censorship and no opposition; and this time it seems the public is to be allowed to dig it.

Maybe the critics are getting hipper. Maybe I'm getting better.

I just want to thank everyone for the second chance to get out there with my real stuff. Now, perhaps, I can finally get on with the work I was cut out for.

This will be my nineteenth year in Show Business, and though there were some sunny seasons, most of it has been empty and cold.

I have the New York stage to thank for my first helping hands, and I hope I can return the favor sometime soon.

I exist up here on this silly silver screen only to serve you, the Audience. And more or less to thumb my nose at the moguls and satyrs who prey on you and me; an almost impossible position to maintain because of the old where-your-bread-is-buttered story, but I try.

For once, this time, everyone involved in this picture show, from the stand-by painter to the head of the studio, gave with all their hearts.

I hope and pray this is a trend for all of us and not just a flash in the sky.

Anyhow, better or worse, thank you for the chance to give, and Merry Christmas to us all.

Have They Saved the Best Movies for Last? Christmas Week Will Tell

"THE ENFORCER"—It takes more than a windshield wiper to get Clint Eastwood as the trigger-happy Dirty Harry. The thriller opens Wednesday at neighborhood theaters.

"A STAR IS BORN"—Kris Kristofferson, a rock singer on the skids, courts Barbra Streisand, a star on the rise, in the musical drama, Friday at the Ziegfeld and Baronet.

"NICKELODEON"—Ryan O'Neal, a bumbling lawyer, is thrown out of a movie studio in Peter Bogdanovich's period comedy-drama, due Tuesday at Columbia I and II theaters.

"KEY AND NUCKY"—John Cassavetes and Peter Falk play a couple of small-time crooks who get into big-time trouble in Elaine May's drama, Tuesday at Little Carnegie.

"VOYAGE OF THE DAMNED"—Faye Dunaway is a doomed passenger on a Nazi ship in the film arriving at the 34th St. East, Loew's Astor Plaza and Cine, Wednesday.

...on the phone to the coast. He'll be through in a minute. Make yourself a drink and I'll go tell him here.

Ted's exit gives me a chance to look around. In the room there's a fully stocked bar, ice, glasses, mixers of all sorts, all surveyed from the wall by the now-absent poster of Kong straddling the two towers of the World Center. The room is otherwise in the decent chaos of a home. I come to realize the cocoon of private life in which Kong travels when on the road: his tape recorder, a set of several dozen cassettes (Mantovani, Carpenters, Highlights from Great Hits by Jeanette Biddell and Nelson Eddy), a tray containing breakfast, a bunch of bananas (which, I later learn, he eats), the usual magazines, paperbacks of Bertrand Russell, Shirley MacLaine's "You Can Get From Here" and "The Golden Bough," a set of bar-half-empty pitcher of what smells like papaya juice, in the center of the coffee table, two huge plates, speckled with nuts and dried fruit, the other with vitamins. This is a room that is being lived in. As I wait, my rings in the distance. I have the feeling that I'm observed by hidden eyes. Suddenly the bedroom swings open and Kong enters.

He is, of course, a good deal smaller than he is played on screen. No more than five-foot-one, I should say, but talks tall and with authority. He comes toward me, smiling like a youngster, and extends his hand, the grip but not bone-crushing, the texture peculiarly rubbery. "Sit down," he says. "I'm sorry to keep you waiting. I'm afraid my agent has made rather a mess of a contract." I am prepared for his small size but not for the gentleness of his voice. It is deep but completely unregional. If anything, a bit too elocutionary. Like that of a failed actor who now sells antiques.

We go through the usual preliminaries. Do I want a drink? No. He'll have a Perrier, which Ted fetches for him as he drinks these days. He offers me a Havana cigar, which I also decline. He lights one up with satisfaction, settles back on the couch. The hair, as far as I can tell, is as thick as ever. It's a rich chestnut color with highlights, which, I suspect, is the work of someone at Michaelson, who receives screen credit for Kong's design in the new film.

Like Kong's directness and suspect that he appreciates the interviewer. "How close," I ask him, "are you—Kong, actor, legend, gentleman farmer—to the character you play in the new 'King Kong'?"

He chews on his cigar. He's been asked this before the answer still is fresh. "I have a real empathy for anyone, other than in spirit. I mean, I would never myself to be captured and used in that way. Perhaps at the age of two or three, I wouldn't have realized that I was being used, but even when I made the first film with Merian (C. Cooper), when I was no more than five, I knew the score about things. I knew who the boss was. Kong doesn't have that. He's simple but he's a good heart."

Then, too, you gotta remember that Kong and I are entirely different apes. Kong is a Third World ape, grown up on an island that is so underdeveloped that it's not even on the map yet. I was born in Hackensack, raised in Wantagh. Kong is a primitive. I'm strictly He-class.

Did Kong always want to be an actor?

"Are you for real?" he says and grins slightly. "If you're an ape growing up in a society of people, what the options? The law? Banking? The diplomatic service? Zoo?"

Why did Kong want to make a comeback now? He doesn't need the bread—or does he?

The question hits a raw nerve. Kong takes the cigar out of his mouth and deliberately brushes the ashes against the side of an ashtray. He makes sure the remaining ash is even all around. He fixes me for a second with his fierce gaze and I think perhaps he's going to slam me in the chops or stomp on me the way he does Charles Grodin in the new picture. Then he smiles—the smile that lights up this new "King Kong" with hope and beauty and compassion and plain old good-will, and which will forever distinguish it from every other monster movie ever made.

"For one thing," he says with patience, "I don't regard this as a comeback. I've never been away. In the last 43 years I've received an average of 65 letters a week, week in and week out, from fans all over the world. Now that's just an average. Some weeks five and six hundred. Other weeks less. There've only been two weeks in all that time when I didn't get any mail at all. The week after Pearl Harbor and just recently the week after Mao died."

"Isn't that interesting?" says Ted to me. "Did you know that? That's something you must remember to tell Barbara, Kong."

Kong ignores Ted, which is what he pays Ted for the privilege of doing. "Mae West and I were talking about this not long ago. People are always asking Mae when she's going to make her comeback, but Mae hasn't gone anywhere. She's right where she's always been, cutting albums, making personal, writing scripts, renting apartments, answering her fan mail. Her pictures never stop playing like mine."

"But you haven't worked in a long time..."

"Correction, please. I've made six films in Japan over the years. One in India and another in Yugoslavia, though that one was never finished. The producer ran off with the payroll leaving us to get out of Zagreb as best we could. But that's show biz. . . . Where was I? Oh, yes, No, I don't need the bread. That's just more work for my accountant. I have a very successful avocado ranch out in the Valley. That keeps me busy. I have my friends like Mae and Duke and Clint whom I see. But I'm an actor, and an actor has to act or he's not an actor. The offers come in all the time, but I won't act in just anything."

"The DeLaurentis offer was something else, something unique for an actor, the chance to measure myself against what I was 43 years ago. Also a chance to work with costars like Jeff Bridges and Chuck Grodin and a director like John Guillermin. Obviously I'm older, wiser than I was 43 years ago. I was pretty cocky then. I've matured. This was one helluva challenge."

"How're you gonna take this story, which has been made under the titles of 'King Kong,' 'Mighty Joe Young,' 'King Kong Escapes,' 'Ape,' 'Godzilla,' and a thousand others

"I'm not ashamed of what I am," said Kong. "I'm an American. I'm proud to pay my taxes as long as they ain't going to welfare programs."

FILM VIEW

Thoughts of a Private Ape

...but it hasn't been interpreted this way before. I looked at all those other films and asked myself, 'What are they lacking?' Even my own pictures. 'What are they lacking?' And I hit on it—HEART!

"Kong is a big dumb ape, of course. With the help of the special effects man he can pick up a subway car and shake out the passengers like so much salt. But he's also...well...vulnerable. His size doesn't mean anything. His hide is just a shell. Inside he's scared and scared. He moves slowly because that's his style, not because he's stupid. He's got faith and faith is something this world needs more of these days..."

Kong gets up and paces about the room, an ape's body with a dancer's glide.

"Christ, I'm tired of everybody's being so anti-everything these days. Like 'Sty' Stallone said in an interview in Crawdad the other day, anti-society, anti-blacks, anti-whites, anti-life, anti-happiness. Everybody's got this Hemingway thing going about fatalism and all. That's something that ties me off. I'm pro-life and proud of it. I'm tired of going to movies and seeing people blown up in their cars or tortured or taking dope. When I go to the movies, I want to see real emotions. I want visceral."

Does Kong have any thoughts about porn?

He throws back his head and roars. I think in laughter but I'm not sure. Then I see his dancing eyes.

"But seriously," he says, "it's not really funny. It's sad. Now I'm as liberal as the next fellow, and what two consenting adults go in privacy is their own business. The problem with pornography is that it's boring..."

"But getting back to the picture. If I could summarize the new movie's Kong I'd say that he's the all-American cornball, like Mr. Deeds and Mr. Smith and Rocky. When he first meets the girl, Jessica Lange, and she swats him on the nose for being rude, he sort of cocks his head to one side as if to say, 'What's this? Who's this tiny, ravishing creature who's had the nerve to slap me, the mighty King Kong?' In a phrase, he does a double-take, the corniest bit of business in the world but still one of the most sure-fire."

"Then, on the ship carrying him back to the States, when Jessica's neckerchief floats into his cage in the hold, Kong picks up the neckerchief, recognizes Jessica's scent, and a faraway look comes into his eyes. Silly? Sure. Corny? Of course. But corny is honesty in my book."

I tell him how much I admired his performance and how, at times, he sort of reminded me of, well, Jimmy Durante, comered.

"Jimmy Durante?" he says, puzzled and, I suspect, not entirely happy.

"It's something about the eyes," I say. What I don't say is that at times they seem to be just slightly crossed.

Kong dismisses Jimmy Durante. "I see him more on the order of Charlie Bronson, in a hair suit." He slaps his knee and explodes with laughter, as does Ted. I mention something about "the old Hollywood" and Kong reminisces about Jack Barrymore, W. C. Fields, David Selznick.

"But I'm not nostalgic. I don't live in the past. I'm too interested in the present to get in that bag, and if you want to know the truth one of the reasons I'm hanging on is because I'm going to vote for Dick Nixon once more before I'm through..."

Ted smiles but is worried. "I don't think you should get into politics, Kong..."

"You," says Kong turning on Ted angrily, "shut up."

Back to me: "If Paul Newman and Warren Beatty and all that crowd can sound off, why can't I? And I'll tell you something else, there are still a lot of pinks and cunnies and left-wingers out there. . . . Ted looks as if he were about to faint. "I'm not ashamed of what I am," Kong goes on. "I'm an American. I love my country. I'm proud to pay my taxes as long as they ain't going to welfare programs and such. . . . Send 'em all back where they came from, that's what I always say."

I take pity on Ted, whom I don't much like ordinarily, but he could be having a heart attack. I change the subject. How, I ask, would Kong categorize the new "King Kong"—as a fantasy, an adventure, a children's picture, science-fiction?

"Are you kidding?" he says. "It's one of the greatest love stories ever told. You've heard about the love that dare not speak its name. This is the love that can't, for perfectly obvious physical reasons. It's sensitive and tragic and, I must say if I say so myself, erotic. But we don't show everything. You've seen the movie. We just suggest things, and as Mae always says, it's much easier when you leave a lot to the audience's imagination. Like that first morning when Jessica wakes up with Kong, you know, and he picks her up in his hand and starts fiddling with her bra with his finger. Nothing overt, you understand. He's just curious. But is that sexy or is that sexy?"

"I loved Fay Wray. I really did, and the first day I walked onto the set of the new film I had an ache in my breast, remembering Fay."

I say that I've heard that all was not exactly serene between him and Miss Lange.

"Where do these stories start?" he says. "Either I'm having a feud with Jessica or we're having an affair. No one is prepared to accept the fact that we're two professionals doing our jobs as best we can. I'll tell you this, though, Jessica is something very special, like me. There's a hint of Monroe about her, and a lot of her own wit."

"I loved Fay Wray. I really did, and the first day I walked onto the set of the new film I had an ache in my breast, remembering Fay. But after two days, Jessica had me in the palm of her hand. That's a switch, right? Write that down. Did you hear that one, Fred, or Ted? I said 'she had me in the palm of her hand.' I mean she and I related in a way that's never happened to me before on a picture. I nicknamed her 'Turk' and she nicknamed me 'Pussycat.' I mean relationships like that don't grow on trees."

At 11:45 the desk calls to say that Kong's limousine has arrived to take him to the Barbara Walters taping. As I'm putting on my coat, Kong does a couple of presses with the barbells, opens a window wide and roars angrily to no one in particular in Central Park. "I have to do that every now and then," he says, closing the window, "just to keep the old pipes clear." I can't mask my surprise when he dons a very natty-looking cashmere polo coat as we are leaving. "I get cold," he says by way of explanation. In the elevator he adds a pair of dark glasses. When we emerge in the lobby, Kong is suddenly recognized, his dark glasses notwithstanding.

My last view of him is Kong standing at the 59th Street entrance, at the top of the steps, holding his shades in one hand and waving to the fans who've been awaiting him—old ladies, small children, taxi drivers, secretaries with tears in their eyes. Kong was right. He's never been away.

BOSTON GLOBE, November 25, 1976

"There is such wit, irony and irreverence in THE THIEF OF PARIS and such insight into the criminal mind that it seems almost astounding that it's so pleasurable."

BOSTON PHOENIX, November 23, 1976

"Almost totally neglected at the time of its release (1967), this is one of Louis Malle's finest films; a brilliant evocation of 1836's France and a searching study of the forces that impel men to their destinies. Malle uses thievery as a metaphor for sexuality, art, and finally the impulses of youth which ensnare men for the rest of their lives. Henri Decae's color photography is delicious, and radiant portrayals by some of France's loveliest actresses illuminate the film: Genevieve Bujold, Marlene Jobert, Francoise Fabian, Bernadette Lafont and Marie Dubois."

BOSTON REAL PAPER, November 30, 1976

Treasures From the Symphonic Trunk

Last week we played the El-Were-Manager operatic game, suggesting neglected or forgotten repertoire that deserves to be heard. Now let's take a look at the symphonic trunk, containing ourselves to the 19th century. For, despite the romantic revival, surprisingly little has been made by conductors and program committees out of the Beethoven-Brahms-Tchaikovsky trunk. True that things are better than they were a few years ago. A look at programs of the major American orchestras shows that year after year the same things come up. The emphasis has shifted a bit. Much more music appears, and pieces by Mozart and Beethoven were then unknown are now standard (though should take a much closer look at the treasures among the hundred-odd Haydn symphonies). The 19th century remains unexplored, and the 20th century is still but unknown.

There is a very large group of turn-of-the-century composers—those pre-romantics who worked from overabundance of such giants as Beethoven. Even so big a man as Carl Maria von Weber. The three overtures and one or two other pieces to most concert-goers. When is the last time coming into New York (or the Philadelphia matter) have programmed a Weber symphony. A fine clarinet concerto. A few years ago, John Frager, we did have the brilliant E flat Piano Concerto, but that has been dropped—and it shouldn't have been.

Adventurous conductors could do much worse than examine representative scores by the important pre-romantics. Most were virtuosos, and hence they wrote vehicles for themselves. There is the once-popular Violin Concerto No. 3 by Spohr—the so-called "Gesangsweise." There is the Hummel A minor Piano Concerto, which anticipates Chopin in so many ways. The Piano Concerto No. 8 by Henri Herz, who was once the hero of the Parisian salons, reveals unexpected breadth and ruggedness. Another great pianist of the day, Johann Ladislaus Dussek, composed music that looked ahead 50 years or so. His B flat Concerto for Two Pianos anticipates Mendelssohn, Schumann and even Brahms.

Even some representative works of the major composers are neglected. We are constantly hearing the four Schumann symphonies, but almost never the Overture, Scherzo and Finale. Schumann's D minor Violin Concerto is neglected, too; it is a late work, awkwardly written, but it has an almost extraneous sadness and beauty. We hear the two Chopin piano concertos, but never the wonderful "Krakowiak." The four Brahms symphonies are always with us, but what has happened to the two serenades (the current Schumann catalogue does not even have a listing for the A major)?

There was a time when "Les Préludes" appeared on every second symphonic program. Today it is forgotten, along with the other Liszt symphonic poems, such as the quiet, harmonically bewitching "Orpheus." (Liszt's harmonies were amazing, and without him there would have been no Wagner or Richard Strauss.) It would be fun to hear "Les Préludes" again, with all its bombast. It is a quintessentially romantic work.

Beethoven needs no help, but Schubert does. Only three of his symphonies are in standard repertoire, and we seldom hear the elegant, lovely No. 4 in C minor, or the Haydnian No. 2 in E flat. There used to be a time when the "Rosemunde" music was programmed. No more. One wonders why such intractably beautiful music has disappeared.

Russian orchestral music is largely neglected aside from Tchaikovsky. And, speaking of Tchaikovsky, why is it that conductors don't look at the first three suites for orchestra? These are evocations of the ballet, as Balanchine well realized when he choreographed No. 3 for his "Theme and Variations." Ironically, the only one of the Tchaikovsky suites that gets an occasional performance is No. 4, called "Mozartiana," which is an orchestration of some Mozart pieces and is pretty much a bore. The Tchaikovsky B flat minor Piano Concerto is always with us, but hardly ever the G major, which in many respects is an even better work.

Gone from our concert life is Rimsky-Korsakov's "Antar" symphony, which Koussevitzky used to conduct with such flair. It is a strong, nationalistic work. Borodin's great B minor Symphony is hovering at the edge of the repertoire, and that is a scandal. Before the war the G minor Symphony by Kalinnikov got an occasional performance; today it is forgotten. It is a lightweight work, but its broad melodies and unabashed romanticism should enchant audiences. Another Koussevitzky favorite used to be Aram's "Variations on a Theme by Tchaikovsky." That too has been dropped. A few years ago there was a brief flurry with Scriabin symphonies, but that has died down. It would be a pity if the "Pohone d'Estace" and "Prometheus" were allowed to languish.

Close to the Russian school is the Bohemian, which brings us to Dvorak. Dvorak composed nine symphonies, of which only the last three are in the standard repertoire. No. 6 in D is heard once in a while, fortunately. No. 5 in F is all but unknown (though, by coincidence, it was played last week by the National Orchestral Association). Yet it is a masterpiece—one of those glowing, richly-orchestrated evocations of river and forest and folk. Here's a Dvorak symphony that almost never comes up (though Leinhardt did introduce it to Boston some years ago)—No. 3 in E flat, powerful, sensuous, the picture of a young genius on his way.

The French school also is neglected these days. Franck's "Les Eolides" used to be played, but no longer. Chausson's B flat Symphony is dropping out, and the fine C major Symphony by Dukas never was in. Fauré's pretty little Ballade for Piano and Orchestra deserves performances, and so does the d'Indy "Symphony on a French Mountain Air." Once in a while Montoux used to conduct the B flat Symphony by d'Indy, and it made a big impression. That too has been entirely forgotten. And here's a delightful novelty—the Gounod symphony, which Bizet copied to create his own Symphony in C.

The century is full of effective concertos by minor composers. These are pretty much of a family: super-virtuosic, derivative, very much of the period, but composed with thorough professionalism. They require heroic, stylish virtuosos, and audiences love them. One thinks of such piano concertos as the Henselt F minor, the Rubinstein D minor, the Moszkowski E major, the Scharwenka B flat minor (which Earl Wild played so magnificently some seasons back), the Spangeli G minor (the property of Jorge Bolet alone), Dohnanyi's "Variations on a Nursery Theme," the neo-Liszt Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra by Bartók (his Op. 1), the Heller F sharp minor.

For violinists there is the Glazunov A minor, which used to be so popular and has now all but disappeared; the Godard "Concerto Romantique," a delicious trifle that Aaron Rosand plays so beautifully; even the Lalo "Symphonie Espagnole," which was so strongly in the repertoire and is now dropping away; the Goldmark A minor; the Viennese A minor; the "Hungarian" Concerto by Joachim.

In the previous century one of the most popular composers was Joachim Raff, whose symphonies took the music world by storm. "Im Walde" is not only a fine symphony by itself; it also gave Brahms some ideas. The ending of Raff's "Im Walde" Symphony, for instance, brings back the opening theme of the first movement, and Brahms picked up that conception for his Third Symphony. Another Raff symphony that used to be wildly popular was his "Lenore." The March from that symphony knocked audiences as dead as the March from Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" later was to do. Raff's March was so popular that it used to be played on its own, divorced from the symphony to which it belongs. In England, Bernard Herrmann has conducted the "Lenore," but it has not been heard in New York for ages.

Much of this music is not for a steady diet. But all of it deserves occasional hearings; it is the product of reputable, once-famous composers, and if nothing else can serve a purpose in demonstrating the continuity of the art. For art is not the product of great creators alone. In museums the glories of the collections are the Rembrandts, the Titians, the Monets, the Cezannes. But museums also are happy to hang a Gainsborough, a Hudson River School painting, a minor Flemish painter, and visitors are equally happy to look at them. So it is in music, or so it should be. There is so much valuable material around; and so little attention is paid to it.

Pro Musica Productions Of 12th-Century Dramas to Be Revived

Some of the most magical moments in music have been provided by the church performances of "The Play of Daniel" and "The Play of Herod," two 12th-century liturgical plays which were first produced here by the New York Pro Musica. The simple beautiful purity of the dramas and the music never failed to touch audiences. When their annual presentations—usually in the Christmas holidays—ceased after 1969, it seemed as if something was missing. The good news is that they are being revived by people closely associated with the original productions, even though Pro Musica no longer exists as an organization.

It came about this way. Toni Greenberg, widow of Noah Greenberg, Pro Musica's founder director, had been thinking about doing the plays again since this year was the 10th anniversary of her husband's death. Then, Wayne Dirksen, musician in residence at Washington Cathedral, called LaNoue Davenport, a Pro Musica alumnus, about doing the plays as part of the Bicentennial celebration. The plays may have been European in origin, but they were the product of American scholarship (Mr. Greenberg's) and American artists.

The costumes were still available. They had been given by Pro Musica to the Costume Collection, a storehouse funded by the New York State Arts Council, from which nonprofit groups can rent costumes. It was possible to put together a full complement of players and musicians from past performances. The original director, Nikos Psacharopoulos, was on hand.

So Mrs. Greenberg and Mr. Davenport have produced the plays again. Five performances of each work will be given at Washington Cathedral between Dec. 28 and Jan. 2. Then the productions will be brought here to the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, where "Daniel" will be given on Jan. 14 and 15 at 8:30 P.M. and "Herod" on Jan. 15 and 16 at 5:30 P.M. The singers will be Ray DeVoll, Anthony Tamburello, Daniel Collins, Arthur Burrows and Sheila Schomberg. Playing the recorders, bagpipe, vielle, rebec and other instruments will be Judith Davidoff, Wendy Gillespie, Shelley Gruskin, Frederick Renz and Steven Silverstein.

Mrs. Greenberg points out that the works have been done by other groups in the meantime, since they are published by Oxford University Press.

"Herod," in fact, was done by the Warsaw Chamber Opera, a production she would have been very curious to see.

Money for the Met

An institution like the Metropolitan Opera needs money. It is constantly holding out its hat and begging. So it was pleasantly surprising not long ago when an outside organization offered to try and raise some funds for it. This was the U. S. Pioneer Electronics Corporation, makers of high-fidelity equipment, which has 2,500 authorized dealers throughout the United States. Based in New Jersey, it had tried out a scheme, limited to the state, whereby the New Jersey Symphony got nearly $8,000.

Bernie Mitchell, president of the company, figured that by extending the plan to all 50 states, it might be possible to collect 50 times $8,000, or $400,000. He presented the plan to the National Endowment for the Arts, whose cooperation he needed, and to the Met. Both were happy about it.

The plan seeks contributions in two areas. Mr. Mitchell is soliciting donations from his dealers, independent representatives of the high-fidelity industry and trade publications. Other funds will come from the public, patronizing Pioneer stores, which will be stocked with collection boxes placed on counters. A sign above each box reads: "The Metropolitan Opera's next performance could be its swan song, unless you give a quarter. . . . When you give a quarter, the Met gets a buck."

The latter sentence is the clue to a major part of the fund-raising plan. For every dollar that is contributed, Pioneer and the National Endowment will match it with three dollars. (The proportion that each gives is not being made public, but Pioneer will give something over a dollar and Endowment the rest.)

Both Mr. Mitchell and Anthony Bliss, the Met's executive director, see the plan as a valuable joint effort on the part of private business, government and public in support of the arts. They hope that other companies will find the plan a good one and will copy it.

Ives on Film

Most musicians remember with horror the romanticized lives of composers that turn up in commercial films. Beethoven is shown literally hearing fate knocking at the door; Brahms is portrayed as a handsome young juvenile, and so on. Fiction drowns out fact, and the creative process is falsely described as pure inspiration.

Now there is a serious, realistic motion picture about Charles Ives, the maverick American, which explores the way his music grew out of his roots in this country. It is called "A Good Dissonance Like A Man," and it was produced and directed by Theodor W. Thumreck. It is not, naturally, a commercial venture, but was made through contributions from the National Endowment for the Arts, the New York State Council on the Arts, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and Mutual of New York.

But the hour-long, color, 16mm. film is not a dry documentary, either. Ives and his wife, famous composition teachers such as Chadwick and Parker, friends and neighbors are portrayed by professional actors. The camera pokes around the composer's homes in Danbury and Redding, Conn. One scene is laid in the First Presbyterian Church of Bloomfield, N.J., where he was organist at the turn of the century. Its present parishioners dressed up in ancient clothes and took part in the film.

There are taped interviews with people who knew Ives, drawn from the oral history that Vivian Perlis made for the Yale School of Music. Ives's music is played complete, wherever possible, not just in useful snatches.

The film has been shown at musical meetings and has been liked particularly for its educational possibilities, as an interesting and lively portrait of some American music in the making and why it came to be. Information about it is available from Betsy Stang, Theodor Thumreck Productions, 35 East 30th Street, New York, N.Y. 10016.

t, observers find it difficult ouble to pinpoint its special. They have no string singling delphia's "velvet strings," or s "ensemble playing," but at a loss for adjectives when to the Philharmonic. "I don't has special qualities, and if ne weakness it would be the ion," says Harold Schonberg, mark that the orchestra lacks ity. "The reason would seem e simple. Over the last 60 e Philadelphia Orchestra has music directors while the Phil- has had over a dozen. Since oscanini left in 1936, the director's job has gone to Sir John Barbirolli, Arthur Rodzinski, Bruno Walter, Leopold Stokowski, Dmitri Mitropoulos, Leonard Bernstein, George Szell and Pierre Boulez—an ever-changing parade of men each of whose temperament and style demanded an extraordinary degree of accommodation on the part of the orchestra.

If Chicago is a Cadillac, and Philadelphia a Rolls Royce, say the musicians at Fisher Hall, the Philharmonic is a Mack truck that can handle anything. Pierre Boulez says that during his time as music director he has "stretched the versatility" of the orchestra and made an imprint "in the direction of virtuosity." He has improved, he says, "their precision, balance and intonation—things I care very much for."

Some orchestra members boast that the Philharmonic could, if pressed, perform the extraordinary feat of sitting down and playing a whole season's worth of concerts at sight, and guest conductor Rafael Kubelik recently told an interviewer that he knew of no other orchestra with whom he could put together a program in so short a rehearsal time.

Who are the members of the New York Philharmonic?

Both promoters and detractors agree that they are "the cream of the cream." Oboist Harold Gombert, flutist Julius Baker, clarinetist Stanley Drucker and cellist Loris Munroe are the orchestra's superstars, and they are backed up by section leaders who have been hand-picked for excellence. Their new concertmaster, Rodney Friend, was hired away this summer from the London Philharmonic where he held the same position, and there are musicians playing second violin in the Philharmonic who have themselves been concertmasters of other orchestras. A large number give solo recitals or play chamber music, and over a third teach in conservatories or universities.

"There's not a man there who can't play," says a musician who has worked at the Philharmonic as an extra, "but they're stubborn as a pack of mules."

"They are an enormously flexible orchestra musically," says a man who has worked in a professional capacity with members of the Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Boston orchestras as well as the Philharmonic. "But there's a lack of concentration. They have excellent soloists, very solid percussion, good strings, strong brass and strong woodwinds with occasional exceptions. But I'm not sure the sections listen to one another. In Cleveland, neat is the natural state. In New York, it's sloppy. Cleveland has no attitude problem. In New York, it's as if they say to the conductor: 'We'll do you the favor of letting you conduct, but you'll have to drag it out of us every inch of the way.'"

"We're more malleable than Boston or Philadelphia," says co-principal trumpet Gerard Schwarz. "We can create many different sounds and styles. We perform a conductor's concert: if he doesn't conduct well, we won't play well. If he's great, we're great. It's our collective personality: to be sensational. We have to be pushed. I don't know if any conductor could force his imprint on us."

Orchestra members are almost 100 percent white (their one black colleague joined in 1962; this season he is on sabbatical leave) and overwhelmingly male (the first woman was also admitted in 1962 and today there are a total of nine). They are largely middle aged (the median age is 47) although one-fifth of the players are currently under 35. They earn at least $23,000 per year and, together with outside income, some gross over $60,000.

"I wanted to join the orchestra since I was a kid," is a phrase one hears frequently from them. Many describe the satisfactions of orchestral work: exceptional colleagues, great soloists and conductors, great music. "You can't play a Mahler symphony by yourself," says violinist Don Whyte. All cite prestige, stability, job security or family as key reasons for their decision to join and stay with the Philharmonic.

"The orchestra is, unsurprisingly, rather conservative," says a musician who is not. "The average man is married, has kids and a house in the suburbs with two-car garage—or aspirations for same. Politically, we're middle to left. There is a small group who belong to pistol clubs, whose favorite presidential candidate was Wallace and

BRAVO!

The Met Box Office now has tickets for performances through February 5, 1977.

The Metropolitan Opera's 1976-77 Season is playing to standing-room audiences right now. But happily, there are still a few tickets available for some Met performances between now and January 29.

In addition, the remaining tickets for the performances listed below will go on sale today.

So hurry to The Met Box Office today between noon and 6 p.m. or any other day between 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. Or, if you prefer, call 580-9830 and reserve your tickets with any major credit card—any day but Sunday.

And if you're interested in complete details on casts and performances at The Met between now and April 16—along with a form that allows you to order your tickets by mail—send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to Mail Order, Metropolitan Opera, Lincoln Center, New York, N.Y. 10023.

But hurry. Because the word for tickets is Now! Just as the word for civilization is Bravo!

A Troubled Giant Facing Change

who are fully convinced that blacks are an inferior race. There is also a very small group of New York-style leftists. Their musical tastes are no more evolved than the average concert-goer's. They sometimes get tired of Beethoven, but contemporary music usually draws a hostile reaction. Many members are so busy with outside interests that they rarely have time for a chat before or after rehearsals, and their ideas of recreation vary wildly. Percussionist Arny Lang runs a small printing press from his midtown loft and his colleague Buster Bailey likes to play in circus bands; violinist Don Whyte takes psychology courses at the New School and horn player John Carabella is a lifelong member of the Australian Bird Observers Club.

Despite many interecine feuds, occasional fistfights, and long-term grudges, orchestra members protect their own. They have made it virtually impossible for management to fire anyone without their cooperation, and, although some musicians have retired earlier than the mandatory age of 67, there have been no outright dismissals for the last 10 years. Nonetheless, there is a palpable hostility toward management and there are several reasons for it. Management at the Philharmonic was for 34 years (1922-56) the province of Arthur Judson, a virtual czar of the concert business who maintained his office at Columbia Artists Management while he worked for the Philharmonic Society.

"When I first came here over 20 years ago, it was scary in a way no one brought up in this country could appreciate," says a veteran player, whose melodramatic portrayal of management is typical of older members of the orchestra. "There was a system of stogees and informers. Extra jobs were not dealt out equitably. Before a contract negotiation they'd put some heads out in the chopping block to strengthen management's hand in bargaining."

"It was a paternalistic situation," says Arny Lang, who joined the orchestra in the early 50's. "The manager would call you into office and say: Be a good boy—we'll have a nice relationship."

Vestiges from that time are still in evidence among some musicians, who refer to their environment as "a fascist state," claim there are informers who tell tales to management, and speak darkly of "repercussions" when one presses them for specifics.

Many are still bitter about the 1973 strike, which lasted 10 weeks and forced orchestra members to scrape up the means to supplement the $50 checks they received each week. They played in homes, organized a Carnegie Hall fund, and booked a tour of Spain. They have evidence, say, that management not only refused to let the musicians during the strike but tried to influence the press to cover coverage of their tour. The harmonic Society threatened their Spanish manager if he played under the name New York harmonic (which belongs to the city) and the orchestra was "106 members of the New York harmonic."

Although that was three years ago and a new managing director, N. Webster, has since taken office, hostility remains. "We got put down in a dungeon while they have two ac of offices upstairs," blusters oboe Harold Gombert. "Who's working for who?"

"The musicians are employees of the Society," replies president Carlos D. Pre Moseley from his office on the plush top floor of Avery Fisher Hall. "They aid and abet in keeping the orchestra's banner as high as possible. Hostility is very foreign to this management. I was ill and in the hospital during the strike but if the Society protected its name, that's within reason—it's not an act of hostility."

Some musicians feel it is. The Philharmonic now has a very broad base of public support ($800,000 in government aid for 1976-77). The exclusive decision-making prerogative of the Society is therefore no longer as readily justifiable, they say, as in the days when a small group of people were the only source of funds. But music who feel this way are often afraid challenge management directly.

The members of the Philharmonic live at the 65th Street Stage Entrance at 9:45 on Tuesday mornings after Involuntary Sunday and frequent Mor off. They leave their coats in the locker rooms on the still-unfined ground level of the building, grab instruments, put out their cigar and hurry up a flight of stairs to stage. At five minutes to ten (as contract) they are sitting in assistants as personnel manager J. Chamber stands at the stage door, ing any lateness or absences.

The New York Philharmonic Agreement provides that each orchestra member must play 40 weeks of cert, may take an optional five weeks of leave, and receive a week paid vacation. In a rare "typ week, with no overtime, extra cor, or recording sessions, the players about 18 hours on stage.

According to their contract they not leave the stage for the purp of playing other engagements; th

may not smoke or carry on conversations; they must present a doctor's certificate if they miss a rehearsal and the Society may take disciplinary measures if they violate any of these regulations.

Managing director Webster says the behavioral aspects of the contract are not enforced and any visitor to a rehearsal immediately realizes they are pretty much a joke. Conductor Laureate Leonard Bernstein's head is engulfed in a cloud of smoke and orchestra musicians chat as freely as if they were sitting in a sidewalk cafe. When the conductor mounts the podium at ten o'clock, the orchestra may or may not be ready to play.

"I had heard it was bad but even in the absence of great expectations I came home in tears the first day," says Jerry Grossman, a cellist who this fall resigned from the orchestra after two years. "They were playing 'Petrushka' which they had done on tour. Boulez was conducting, and I could not believe what was going on. A musician would play bird calls on his instrument. Grown men took every opportunity to call attention to themselves. Others tried to get away with whatever they could behind the conductor's back. No one gave a damn about 'Petrushka.' At first I thought they'd played it so much they were just sick of it. But then I realized it was a gig for them. Some played their notes in the right places; some didn't. At best, it was a professional situation. It was not even close to an artistic one."

At about eleven, the musicians are given a 20-minute break during which they make phone calls, smoke and relax. Fifteen minutes into the break, the personnel manager's voice comes over the loudspeakers in their new clubroom, "Onstage please." They rehearse until 12:30, then rush out of the hall and do not return until the evening concert.

Some orchestra players ascribe their undisciplined behavior to the tensions that develop because of their regimentation. Others blame guest conductors.

What is the problem with the guest conductors? "We set high standards for ourselves and we expect the same of our conductors," says violinist Hanna Lachert. "We are the lifeblood of the orchestra; the conductors are the vampires," says a soloist.

After each conductor has completed his stint with the orchestra, players fill out a Conductor Evaluation Chart. They answer six questions including: How well does the conductor's baton technique indicate exactly when and how he wants you to play? Does he use time efficiently? Does he command the respect of the orchestra? Musicians are also asked: Would you like to have him conduct your orchestra again?

The actual vote count is confidential, and is sent to the International Conference of Symphony Orchestra Musicians and to the Philharmonic's management only. "But they have in every case been very clear-cut votes," says Larry Newland, a member of the Artistic Committee which tabulates them. According to well-informed players, the orchestra voted "Yes" for Carlo Maria Giulini, Bernard Haitink, Colin Davis, Daniel Barenboim, Rafael Kubelick and Zubin Mehta. They voted "No" for Lukas Foss, Sarah Caldwell, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and Michael Tilson-Thomas. Two of the latter group no longer conduct the orchestra, but the other two have been re-engaged by the Society.

President Moseley has no comment to make regarding the results of the evaluations, but he insists, "the guest conductors are chosen by very knowledgeable people including the music director. If one looks at the roster, one finds the names of most of the prominent conductors in the world today. We have always felt we must bring along some of the younger conductors in America and give them a chance. Mr. Bernstein was given that opportunity when he was a very young man as was Thomas Schippers, and we find that a very good policy."

Both he and managing director Nick Webster point out that there is only a very small supply of top conductors and that they are not necessarily available for the dates on which the Philharmonic Society would like them to conduct.

In addition to problems with management and guest conductors, players point to the almost schizophrenic feeling they get playing for the two B's, Bernstein and Boulez. The former has played over 1,200 concerts with the orchestra—more than twice the number of any other conductor. The latter is its current music director, who enjoys the respect of some players but is blamed for the orchestra's poor morale by others.

"With Bernstein, it's like mortal combat," says a brass player. "All the emotions are going strong even if it takes 10 years off your life to figure out what he's doing and you are running way overtime. With Boulez, you know what he's doing and it's like performing an autopsy. He understands pitch and rhythmic relationships—not music. It's like he sees a beautiful woman and thinks out, in centimeters, the length of her nose."

Bernstein was and still is a great drawing card at the box office and the orchestra plays for him: "It's always exciting, no matter what the music is," says a string player. "But after one week, there's just too much of him." When he is conducting, rehearsals run overtime, recording dates are set and abruptly changed, the atmosphere at the hall is tense and emotional, and overtime is so common that 106 players suddenly find they can make no definite plans.

"Let me talk to you a minute about the Shostakovich," Bernstein said at the beginning of a dress rehearsal earlier this month, although he had talked about the composer at two previous rehearsals. "This symphony is a very great piece. I think it's one of the dozen great masterpieces of this century. He wrote it when he was very ill, very feeble . . ."

Five minutes passed and some of the players looked as absorbed as children listening to a fairy tale while others fidgeted.

"Shostakovich chose the poems of Rilke, Lorca, Apollinaire and a poet named Kuchelbecker," Bernstein continued in a quiet voice. "The first two are very short. I don't really have to read them to you but . . ."

For the next seven minutes Bernstein recited and partially explicated poetry, and some orchestra members started glancing at their watches. Toward the middle of the third poem, one of the violinists walked off the stage and up to the personnel manager.

"Can't you do something?" he demanded. "We have a concert tonight. We can't stay overtime again."

The personnel manager told him he could do nothing, and 15 minutes went by before Bernstein finally turned to the symphony which he had described earlier as "fiendishly difficult." At twelve-thirty, the usual end of rehearsal, they were in the middle of the work. At one o'clock, having put in the half hour of overtime required by their contract for a dress rehearsal, a few violinists stopped playing in mid-bow and left the stage. Some hurried to other appointments but some left in protest against Bernstein's poor organization of their time.

Boulez, on the other hand, rarely runs overtime, rarely changes a schedule once it has been printed and never lectures the orchestra on an extramusical subject. "His problem is that he has no pedagogic talent whatsoever," says a player. While Bernstein coos, shouts cajoles and compliments musicians as they are playing, "Boulez just beats through it all with a straight poker face. You play well or badly—his face doesn't change. He doesn't know how to deal with players tactfully when they make a mistake or pat them on the back when they've played well." His espousal of contemporary music still irritates some musicians, who call him Buzz, say the music they play makes them feel silly, and behave accordingly. "I got literally sick to my stomach when we were doing the Cage piece last month," says a brass player. "It makes you feel dirty. You feel: this isn't music. My instructions for the piece specified that I make noise with my voice in one section. I'm partial to cats so I made cat noises. You should have seen Boulez! He stopped the rehearsal and said: I'm sorry to tell you that this is a very serious thing and we have no room for cat noise!"

Boulez, players say, is an excellent administrator who "meets problems head-on and is not afraid to make decisions for fear of hurting anyone's feelings." But although musicians say he tried in the beginning, he has not been able to make a dent in the overall rowdiness of the New York Philharmonic.

A few thoughtful players do think that part of the problem is of their own making. "Good leadership takes us a long way," says Ralph deLeon, "and that means not just the conductor but the orchestra. It has not been encouraged and people feel that it's not workable."

The orchestra does have two committees, which it elects from a fully qualified group of candidates. One is a Committee negotiates contracts and the Artistic Committee sets up the strike three year advises management on musical terms. "But that committee has teeth," says a member. "The S does what suits its purposes and Members who have served on committees are reluctant to serve because the work takes a great of time and the rewards of a go-go-between for management and orchestra are virtually non-existent. Moreover, despite efforts by managing director Nick Webster to make approaches to orchestral players majority of players remain on that basically their situation change."

As for Mehta, rumor has put him to the Philharmonic. "I hear the musicians in L. sorry to see him go and that for a conductor who has been as long as he has," says a string. "There are conductors who're of conducting this orchestra and think Mehta is."

"He rides them hard," say players. "He's got a reputation for decisions firmly and fairly," another.

"Most people think it's a good he's coming but we're reserving ment," says a brass player, who a smile delivers what must be a derisive statement of all time about a league: "We're a skeptical orchestra."

and your wife can love

You want the finest audio components available, like the YAMAHA CA 3000 Professional Integrated Amplifier. Your wife would like it in the basement. Until now, the only compromise was no compromise at all. Either your living room looked like a Hi-Fi showroom or you had to put up with questionable remote control gimmicks. At last there's SONIQUE. You select the components and we'll interface them with our unique SONIQUE SYSTEM.

Try to see it her way, then maybe she'll try to hear it your way.

Baryshnikov as Choreographer

cal, and it shows the real classical tradition of Russian corps choreography at its very best. But everything else—all the other steps and variations are mine. I started from scratch, and, of course, I was extremely nervous. Still, I plunged ahead."

Just how different can "The Nutcracker" be?

"Well, first of all, I have never considered Nutcracker to be a Christmas ballet. In fact, I was very surprised that in America it's very much of a Christmas present. My own feeling is that Nutcracker has absolutely nothing to do with Christmas. Yes, it takes place on Christmas eve, and it's winter-time, but for me, it's really a love story. It's about all those beautiful and frightening dreams a very young girl has when she first wakes up to love. It's that moment in a girl's life when she first experiences all those complicated emotions, some of which she doesn't understand herself, and none of which have anything to do with Christmas. You see, her soul opens and grows, just like the Christmas tree. But the Christmas tree is only a symbol of her own growing emotions. So, my whole point of view is to show Clara falling in love with her prince. In my version, Clara is never quite certain whether all the strange and wonderful things she is feeling, and the things that are happening all around her are a dream or reality. Like first love, everything becomes very disturbing and very am-

In the rehearsal studio at ABT, Baryshnikov sits flanked by ballet masters Scott Douglas and Jurgen Schmiedt, who are assisting him in the production. Hair tousled, and wearing practice clothes, Baryshnikov has assembled the company for a run-through of Act II. Baryshnikov would dance the role of The Prince, alternating with principals Charles Wanzel and Clark Gippet. The Glucks would be danced by Marianna Tcherkasskaya, Leslie Brown, and Florence Clerf; a guest ballerina from the Paris Opera Ballet, Alexander Minz-and Gayle Young would alternate in the role of Drosselmeyer.

Baryshnikov motions to the pianist and, as the music begins, carefully observes a pas de deux he had composed for Miss Tcherkassky and Charles Ward. In a moment, he jumps up and steps in-for Ward to demonstrate the steps more accurately. "Dancing follow-up, he instructs Ward on the easiest way to negotiate a particularly difficult lift. "Hold her just below the knee, and do the lift in one quick movement . . . like this! It will be more lyrical. And you, Marianna, make the arm movements softer as you rise to his shoulders. The whole composition should look fluid and beautiful."

Speaking rapidly and excitedly, and continually searching for the right words to pinpoint his wishes, Baryshnikov, whose English is now fairly secure, darts back to his chair to study his own choreography on the bodies of the next two dancers. The French technical terms for what is being executed stream from his mouth. He asks for greater sharpness or lyricism or crispness during the progress of the pas de deux. Throughout, Baryshnikov stresses technical clarity, but insists that it always be placed at the service of the emotions being portrayed. At one point, he tells his three Claras to make, he emotions speak through their bodies rather than through the expression on their faces. "The steps will tell what you are feeling, mademoiselles backward, bourrées, express sadness. You must show that you don't want to escape from your team. You need this with the steps and with a slight curving of your shoulders . . . like this." And Baryshnikov himself quickly, bourrées backward, demonstrating what he means.

During the progress of the rehearsal, Baryshnikov works on the five bravura variations that take place during Act

II. He has devised a "Chinese" Dance," a "Shepherd's" Dance," a "Russian" Dance," a "Dance of the Buffoons," and a "Spanish Dance." Such diversifications are traditionally a part of this act, but Baryshnikov has given them his own highly flamboyant choreographic intonation. Striving for change, he has omitted the popular Oriental or "Coffee" variation, seen in other productions, and in place of the traditional "Mother Ginger" variation, has used its music for a "Dance of the Buffoons," an extremely demanding variation for four men. Here, Baryshnikov employs the sort of tour-de-force feats he himself is capable of, with swift and dangerous barrel turns, high leaps, and even back-flips and somersaults. In choreographing for the women, Baryshnikov is equally demanding, but he skirts any undue acrobatics, stressing instead speed and eroticism.

It was when the dancer began choreographing for the large corps, numbering some sixty dancers, that he was at his most agitated. With the exception of the "Waltz of the Snowflakes," which he had reconstructed from his memory of the Valençon choreography, he was often stymied regarding groupings, traveling directions, the assembling and dis-assembling of various formations. To move so large a number of dancers in ways that would look uncluttered became a problem of logistics. The aim was to make the dancers move with inevitability and beauty.

In choreographing his "Waltz of the Flowers," for example, he would move energetically "between the dancers, placing them in varying positions, attempting to shape an overall design that would be both geometrically pleasing and choreographically valid. There were repeated changes, endless counting, and much demonstrating. "No, no! That doesn't look right! Let's try it this

MILTON KRAMER

Bringing an Entire Career to Life

Between the paintings that an artist produces in his lifetime and the way they come to be characterized and "seen" by posterity there are often — perhaps more often than not — some remarkable discrepancies. Take the case of Ernest Lawson (1873-1938), whose paintings are currently the subject of a comprehensive exhibition at the A.C.A. Galleries, 25 East 73d Street. For years Lawson's art was consigned, permanently it seemed, to the so-called Ash Can School that caused such a disturbance among the genteel minds responsible for determining the official taste of the American art world at the turn of the century. That Lawson was never drawn to Ash Can subjects, that the colorful realism of city life was never of much interest to him, somehow was overlooked. He had exhibited his pictures with "The Eight." Some members of this group, John Sloan especially, were indeed drawn to such "ugly" subjects, and that was enough. Through a kind of guilt by association, the Ash Can label was attached to Lawson, and it stuck. No one seemed to notice that the man was obsessed, even when he painted the city, with a quite different imagery — with the light and space and loneliness of the pastoral landscape.

In recent years, however, this misperception of Lawson's work has begun to be corrected. A new generation of American art historians, especially those concerned with the American Impressionists, has moved to establish Lawson firmly in the "line" of this movement, and this is where he surely belongs. Yet this revision in his status has caused certain problems for Lawson's reputation. The gentility of American impressionism was one of the things "The Eight" were thought to have rebelled against. If Lawson were really an Impressionist, after all, then he would obviously have to be stripped of his credentials as a rebel. This, more or less, is the fate meted out to him in the latest history of American art — John Wilmund's volume on "American Art" (Penguin, $40) in the prestigious Pelican History of Art series. Lawson is dismissed in a sentence, and no work of his is reproduced. No rebellion, no merit. Such is the inference we are encouraged to draw from this judgment.

Dennis R. Anderson, on the other hand, is eager to retain the old rebel image, and he brings forward a new claim for it. In the catalogue for the show he has organized at the A.C.A. Galleries, Mr. Anderson alleges a significant connection with Cézanne. He even suggests that Lawson, who spent some years in France, where he did know Sisley, was personally acquainted with Cézanne, but not a scrap of evidence is produced to support the claim. I see no connection in the painting, in any case. If Lawson did know Cézanne or studied the master's pictures, the experience had little effect on his own. The crucial influence on Lawson was Twachtman's and — given the conditions of American painting at the time — a pretty good influence it was, too. Lawson was still in his teens when he studied with John H. Twachtman — in my opinion, the greatest of the American Impressionists — and he never strayed very far from this basic influence in a long lifetime of painting. This may have made him a minor painter, which I believe he was, but it gave him his distinctive quality, and we misrepresent him if we place him in the very different orbit of Cézanne's ideas about pictorial form.

Lawson had a coarser sensibility than Twachtman's, and this was an advantage, I think. It freed Lawson of what could have been a crippling gentility and delicacy. The soft light and delicate texture we admire in Twachtman's paintings seem to be compounded of mist and light, Lawson's hands — something earthier, something more emphatic and physical and direct. Whereas Twachtman's best paintings seem to be compounded of mist and light, Lawson's are unmistakably made of paint, and lots of it — he really piled it on. Lawson, too, loved nothing so much as a snow-covered landscape, preferably with some water to provide a slight shift of color and tonality, but he does not make of this theme the network of pictorial nuances at which Twachtman excelled. Everything in Lawson is more openly stated, and he makes up in energy what he lacks in subtlety.

This is why Lawson could pass, albeit briefly, as a rebel when he showed with "The Eight," and why the Academy was at first reluctant to acknowledge his gifts. The realist painters of Lawson's generation were in revolt against the false gentility of the Gilded Age, and the official custodians of that taste had a positive horror of anything that smacked of energy or "vulgarity." Lawson seemed, for a time, to qualify as an antagonist in this battle, and not because his subjects were "ugly" but because the way he painted them seemed to violate good taste. As soon as it was recognized that he was, after all, in a "tradition" that was safely removed from the innovations let loose on the American art scene by the Armory Show and the Stieglitz circle, he was embraced by the Academy, heaped with prizes and awards, and became a favorite of the leading collectors of the day.

There are some fine pictures in the A.C.A. show — "Winter Landscape: The High Bridge" from the Brooklyn Museum, "Upper Harlem River" from the Horowitz Collection, and the beautiful "Spring Thaw," one of his masterpieces, among others — but Lawson is not a "big" painter, and an exhibition on this scale (more than 80 pictures) has the effect of underscoring his weaknesses. There is a certain monotony in seeing so many landscapes — there are nothing but landscapes, for Lawson was interested in painting nothing else — so similarly conceived and executed. Yet there is no substitute for seeing a large collection of an artist's work. Only then can we really gauge the scope of his talent, and register his strength. For the large public that knows Lawson only from a few pictures in the museums and a few references in the history books, this exhibition performs a valuable service in bringing the entire career to life.

And what a career it was! Lawson was born in Nova Scotia, and had already been an art student in Kansas City and Mexico City before he came to New York, at the age of 18, to study with Twachtman at the Art Students League. He went to Paris when he was 20, and shared a studio with Somerset Maugham. It was on one of his painting expeditions to the countryside that he met Sisley. When he returned to America in 1894, he married his art teacher from Kansas City, and went back to France. The marriage was not a success, though it was never dissolved, and Lawson took to drink. He moved from place to place, and in the end became something of a burden to his friends. In the Depression, they had to raise money to keep him going, and in 1939, while living in Florida, he is believed to have committed suicide (though Mr. Anderson seems to doubt this). It was not a happy life.

Yet, as often happens in such lives, his art remained a fixed point in it. It is this sense of a fixed and steady devotion, I think, that we take away from this exhibition, which remains on view through Dec. 31.

Jean Greuze's "Child Playing With a Dog" — "true and deep feeling"

GALLERY VIEW

JOHN RUSSELL

the greater part of this century the reputation of Jean-Baptiste Greuze (1725-1805) stood as below zero. Of the immoderate fame which he surrounded him, not a trace remained. Here Diderot, most eloquent of all writers on art, had gone overboard in Greuze's favor, away in embarrassment. Whereas Catherine sent to Paris for his paintings and would of him come to St. Petersburg, our tyrants of art? Forget it!

recently, that is. Time brings its revenge in and in the 1960's a generation of young art it possible that Diderot was not a complete admirer of Eugene Delacroix was not won at if the Goncourt brothers were right about about Watteau and right about Boucher it was at they were also right about Greuze. Was wrong with Greuze, all this time? Well, his work was faded on a vast scale and or another, he believed that the worth of painting was in direct relation to the moral could be drawn from it. And, finally, many paintings were in remote places, while most exhibition-drawings on which he lavished looked away in the great print-rooms of the night out only for those who go and ask

as a handicap for an artist who thrived above contact with an audience which rejoiced with him, understood his every intimation and a fountain of true and deep feeling. Greuze e when the frontiers of feeling were being an-Jacques Rousseau and the customs of social called in question by Diderot and his fellow. Greuze wanted his paintings and drawings habits for the better. How could he foresee ition would for many years be regarded as he "Don't knock Greuze" campaign which started in an exhibition of quite exceptional distinction at the Wadsworth Atheneum in is there till January 25, moves next to the Museum in San Francisco, and ends its museum in Dijon, France, in June-July 1977.) h of what matters most in recent studies of a rescue operation is Anglo-American in origin but has been eagerly seconded by the Musée de France, and in particular by Michel Lacotte and Pierre Rosenberg of the Louvre. The presiding genius and preeminent lobbyist in the whole venture is Edgar Munhall, Curator of the Frick Collection in New York, for whom the stature of Greuze has long been something to be defended against all comers. Peter O. Marlow, acting director of the Wadsworth Atheneum, is a former pupil of Mr. Munhall; and we can adopt a French idiom and say that in this weighty enterprise the two of them have been "like shirt and backside," parrying every obstacle and making sure that the presentation of the show has a simplicity and an elegance which allow the work to speak for itself.

Greuze did, sometimes rather pile it on. That drink can ruin an honest workman and indulgence bring a full-fledged country girl to a bad end is not exactly news in 1776. But the point of Greuze is the distinction of his utterance, the quality of his agitation, the barely-matched eloquence with which he sets the scene. His drunkards are nearer to Racine than to Eugene O'Neill. His lazy ladies are painted as Le Nain would have painted them had he lived in the 1750's. As for his fallen virgins and their seducers — well, we may not rate virginity as highly as he, but we know as well as he did that it is a dreadful moment in human affairs when trust is violated and confidence abused; and to that moment Greuze is one of the supreme witnesses.

From this comes the tender assurance of his portraits, for instance. Faced with a man of the world like John George Wille — engraver, teacher, academician and gastro-nome — he got his looks to perfection. Faced with a revolutionary like Billaud-Varenne, he set down the man's implacable nature with a conviction that recalls that of the great French aphorists of 100 years earlier. Faced with a pretty girl, Greuze melted; and to what an effect!

Greuze prized a pretty woman above all things. (When he was in Rome as a young man Fragonard said of him that he was "a Cherubino crazed by love.") Though miserably mated with a prototypical shrew from whom he got divorced at the age of 70, Greuze never lost the ability to turn an original compliment, and when he painted a good looking woman he brought to the everyday task an ardor and an immediacy which are as startling today as they were in his own lifetime. And in his middle seventies, at a time when by his own account he had "lost everything but courage and talent," he painted the monumental female nude which brings the Hartford show to a most arresting conclusion. Around that same time he made a drawing of "The Post Anacreon Crowned by Love"; and somewhere within the battered features of Anacreon a self-portrait of Greuze lies half-hidden.

Just once or twice at Hartford we glimpse the Greuze to whom legend has been so unkind: the master of the tearstreaked eyeball and the Heavenward look of repentance. But the Greuze whom Mr. Munhall sets before us both in the show and in the very eloquent catalogue ($17.95 by mail) is on the contrary a paragon of heroic energy, a man eager to embroil himself in the moral and social issues of his time, and a designer on the grand scale whose every touch bespeaks an imperious will.

This is remarkably enough, the first-ever retrospective of Greuze. No one who cares for art should miss it, and in a well-ordered world it would come in time to New York. As there is no sign of its doing so, New Yorkers may like to note that on January 8, 15 and 22 special day-long bus excursions will run from Manhattan to Hartford and back. For information, call the Islanders Club, (212) 679-5810.

But this elegant, fleeting sampling of the "diversity, richness and poetry of American architecture," in the words of Adolph K. Placzek, head of the Avery Library, serves to tease us into an awareness of the range and quality of the treasures Avery holds. Buildings are the clothes a society wears, cut to its taste and image; they are the way it presents itself to the world and posterity. Architectural drawings are a particularly revealing kind of art.

These drawings, which date from the 18th century to the present, can be looked at in several ways. They can be seen as beautiful examples of architectural draftsmanship, precise and sensual at the same time, an enlightening index to American cultural aspirations and ideals, a series of socio-aesthetic documents on the built environment, or a simple history of American architectural design. They have many levels of meaning and pleasure.

First, the pleasure — which is almost enough in itself. These are, for the most part, exquisite drawings, full of charm, skill and gentle subtleties. If there is a single word that, surprisingly, characterizes almost all of them over nearly two centuries, it is delicacy. The architectural draftsman's art is one of both exact specification and evocative nuance; the purpose may be the giving of accurate information in an elevation or working drawing, or the persuasive transmittal of a concept to a client through a perspective rendering.

All of these drawings are therefore marked by a combination of stringent clarity and romantic suggestion, no matter how much the style of both building and rendering may change. The early designs, from George Hadfield's Adam-inspired house of 1798 through the more modish, classical revivals of Martin Thompson and Andrew Jackson

Lawson's "Upper Harlem River" — "loneliness of the pastoral landscape"

Davis in the 1820's and 30's, are confections of controlled, pale watercolor washes in cream, blue, green, beige and even pink, accented by fine pen lines and neat gray shadows.

The same refined ink-and-wash technique carries through the midcentury Gothic and Tuscan villas and churches of Richard Upjohn and James Renwick Jr. One can only be enchanted by the innocent eclecticism of this world of high architectural fashion, with its orderly air of refinement and grace.

But this delicacy reaches a degree of startling brilliance in the pencil sketches of Louis Sullivan. To find some of the boldest and most original work in American architecture in representations the size of one's hand, delineated with a feather touch, is not only unexpected, it is overwhelming.

A tiny, three-inch elevation contains the entire facade of the Farmers and Merchants Union Bank of Columbus, Wisconsin, of 1913, with each element in place and all of the ornament clearly indicated. Another five inches defines the building's arched side. Everything is there. These sketches are literally miniatures, and they burst with invention and mastery. They must be some of the most magical drawings in the history of architecture.

That same delicacy comes full circle in drawings from the firm of Venturi and Rauch in the 1970's. A concise linear style creates an almost abstract rendering of uniform ink lines reduced to a minimum geometry. This sophisticated treatment of the vernacular 20th-century street scene that the architects champion has a measured finesse that makes the ordinary extraordinary, and they burst with invention and mastery. They must be some of the most magical drawings in the history of architecture.

designed to recognize, is imbued with both art and order by the architectural intellect.

The show's drawings are equally rewarding as architectural history. The change from Martin Thompson's to Calvin Pollard's Greek Revival within a ten-year span, for example, is both subtle and startling. The flat arcades and pilasters that overlay Thompson's formal facade for New York's Second Merchants Exchange like a light, rich screen — a treatment that survived from Serlio and Palladio in Italy through Wren and Jones in England — is stripped away in the Third Merchants Exchange for the severe surfaces and openings of an austere romantic classicism.

As eclecticism and romanticism grew in the 19th century, the buildings ceased to be pure, isolated objects. The natural landscape appeared with the Gothic revival. One of the show's stars, Upjohn's beautiful 1839 watercolor presentation drawing for New York's Trinity Church (built in the 1840's) at the foot of Wall Street, includes a bucolic graveyard more suggestive of the English countryside than a growing city.

As styles became more ambitious, reflecting more money and higher aspirations, drawings and designs became freer and more "artful." Wilson Eyre Jr. produced white marble French palaces and stone-and-shingle country houses in the 1880's and 90's with equal conviction and the same drafting ease.

way. You four girls move over there, and you four boys stand behind them. Now I want the same on the other side. Alright. Now, let's try it again." Repeatedly, Baryshnikov would clap his hands, indicating to the pianist to stop playing. "Stop it, stop it! The structure isn't right. How can I make it look better? I don't want it to look like 'Sleeping Beauty.' Maybe the men should be on their knees at this point."

Continually searching for choreographic symmetry, Baryshnikov would walk to his chair and sit in silence, anxiously running his hand through his hair, closing his eyes, hoping for inspiration. Suddenly, he'd spring up, trying out new movements that he would first execute himself, then demonstrate to his dancers. On several occasions, choreographer Antony Tudor, a co-director of American Ballet Theater, would stop by to observe the proceedings. At these times, Baryshnikov never hesitated to consult with Tudor. He would show him what he had done, and sought his advice. "Does it make any sense to you? Is the choreography clear? Does it help to tell the story, or is it all nonsense?" Generally, Tudor would smile cryptically, and say, "Just go on, Misha. You'll find a way." But, at times, Tudor did make a number of suggestions, all of which Baryshnikov promptly used. "Ah, yes! Now it works much better!" Baryshnikov would say, beaming.

As director of the entire production, Mikhail Baryshnikov involved himself with all aspects of the production, forcing at length with set Boris Aronson and costume Frank Thompson, the most critical would be the costumes. When shown the costumes, he instantly caught every cap the girls would be in sorry, but they look like cats," he said, suddenly breaking moments of someone's script under a shower. "The de be fit on the head. Those go to go," Jürgen Schneider told of the boys' tutus might be "No, I don't think so," said nikov. "The skirts are just a lot of leg showing."

With the dancers, Baryshnikov tained an attitude of informal friendliness. Still, there was a tension as to who was in charge, absolute concentration, at least about making rehearse hard. At the same time, he came any dancer's comment technical points that might be with greater facility. Baryshnikov's disposition was in throughout rehearsals, when that everyone gave of their when his ideas were more discipline and intelligence. It was of the essence. During or al, Baryshnikov discovered his Clara-Leslie Brown-ing. Lucia Chase happened the room. "Leslie is rehe another ballet just now, Mi told him.

Light is a big night in "Phantom of the Open Hearth," Thursday M. on Ch. 13. Below, author Jean Shepherd discusses the show.

"THE HOMECOMING"—'Tis the day before Christmas, 1933, and Richard Thomas and Patricia Neal are members of a mountain family facing a crisis. Earl Hamner's story, which inspired "The Waltons" series, will be rebroadcast Friday at 8 P.M. on CBS.

humorist looks outward and sees the world. "A comic looks inward and sees himself." It was a practiced reply, but then a practiced humorist, not been performing and writing individualistic way for Thursday night at 9 on viewers will see what is most ambitious project to length play entitled "Phantom of the Open Hearth" on the PBS.

Shepherd continued, "It ends in laughter, but form in which laughter is I do humor—I'm not Don't not a value judgment, the distinction." action that viewers might consider when watching the Open Hearth? When from Shepherd's novel, key's Night of Golden Other Disasters," the a high school prom, dance and growing up in "But it's like nothing seen before on TV," says act play, there's a lot of cutting back and forth from the parents to the kid, a lot of flashbacks.

Shepherd is careful to emphasize the contemporaneity of the play, despite its setting somewhere in the 1940's. "I'm anti-nostalgia," he said. "I think nostalgia is a sickness. It's symptomatic of a deep cleavage in American life. It's one of the only things Americans have left in common—the past. How else can a kid from Hammond, Indiana, and a kid from Brooklyn talk to each other? They have to talk about Bogart because they don't understand anything else about each other's lives."

The play is part of Shepherd's continuing effort to bridge that gulf between Hammond and Brooklyn. "All of my pieces are contemporary," Shepherd insisted. "I write about American ritual, which is largely unchanged, and I try to place my characters in a real milieu, one that we all live in." The prom described in "Phantom" could have been any time in the past 50 years, he said. "When we shot the prom scenes, we went up to a school near Boston and asked them to hold a prom for us—not an old-fashioned prom, just a normal one like they hold every year. Well, it was exactly right for the period of the play—nothing had to be changed. The tuxedos,

"I'm very careful not to write about things that are dead and gone. And Americans haven't changed much in the past 50 years. Kids still go to proms, fathers go bowling, mothers go shopping—maybe not in New York but in the rest of the country they sure as hell do. And I can tell you, New York City is not America."

Jean Shepherd has been living in New York City, however, since the late 1950's. He came out of the Midwest, a successful television performer in Cincinnati, hoping to replace Steve Allen on the "Tonight" show. He's been a semi-pro baseball player, a stand-up comic, a film writer, a contributor to magazines ranging from Mademoiselle to Car and Driver and, in his words, "a media performer." "Phantom of the Open Hearth" is his first full-length television play, but he's no stranger to the typewriter. His novels, "Wanda Hickey" and "In God We Trust, All Others Pay Cash," remain steady sellers, particularly on the college scene, ten years after publication. His latest novel, "The Secret Mission of the Blue Assed Buzzard," about his Army career, is due in January.

Shepherd has also been an actor on the Broadway stage, done one-man shows at Carnegie Hall and been host of a television series, "Jean Shepherd's America," that one critic called "an antidote to Bicentennialitis." All this was in addition to his nightly radio broadcast on WOR (Marshall McLuhan once characterized Shepherd's radio program as a "nightly novel.")

The novel Shepherd is putting together, in print and sound, is the story of the 20th-century American, a lofty goal for someone whose first job was in a steel mill. But he argues that it is precisely such a background that equips him to catch the spirit of America in these times. "This is an industrial country, man. Who writes about that life today? Nobody. Novels that get reviewed are about New York or Los Angeles; not about some kid from a steel town who buys a Red Ryder BB gun. That's not an official kind of novel, that's nostalgia." He sneered at the last word. "Listen, once I had to call up The Times, when 'In God We

Tom Snyder Casts His Vote For Risk-Taking

What is a Tom Snyder? Probably not even his hairdresser knows for sure, but the search for an answer provides a revealing tour of TV's news and entertainment mazes. The outspoken Snyder doesn't hesitate to call some aspects of his business "an impossibility" or "a con job."

He is not what most of his colleagues would call discreet. His boredom threshold is extremely low, and when he begins to get itchy on a dull news day, program executives reach for their high-potency nerve pills. For better or worse, he establishes a defined presence. Unlike most other TV newsmen, he refuses to fade into slick processing. The result, of course, represents something of a gamble. While some viewers may be attracted to his irreverence, others will be turned off by his abrasiveness. Snyder is aware of this, but he is addicted to risk-taking.

Until two years ago, Snyder had been the successful news anchorman for NBC's station in Los Angeles. He also had assumed duties as host for the "Tomorrow" show, which follows the "Tonight" show at 1 A.M. Then he was brought to New York to anchor the second hour of NBC's early-evening "Newscenter 4." With Snyder and, during the first hour, Chuck Scarborough in attendance as anchor, "Newscenter 4" has advanced nicely in the ratings. WNBC had been a miserable third behind WCBS and WABC in the lucrative market of the evening news. Now it is "fully competitive," sometimes coming out first in the still volatile New York area ratings.

Snyder, however, is not about to relax and collect his easy dividends. At his own request, he will leave "Newscenter 4" next June 1. Under a new NBC contract, he will concentrate on his "Tomorrow" show, originating more broadcasts from such different locations as Florida and Chicago. For the moment, his only other duties are described, rather hazily, as possibly being connected with some network documentaries.

In a recent interview, Snyder outlined his reasons for the changes with characteristic bluntness. In sum, he is tired, bored to a certain extent and worried about the future. His duties on "Newscenter 4," combined with the "Tomorrow" show, plus the one-minute network news capsule he presents each weekday evening at 9, meant that he was "literally on the baseball diamond for three hours a night and going all the time." His schedule on WNBC rarely dovetailed with his network time, and arranging for an extended vacation became increasingly difficult. "It just started to tear me apart," he says. On the other hand, Snyder complains that the network seems reluctant to give him more prestigious exposure. "Suddenly you notice that you haven't been asked to do the conventions," he explains. He tried out for but didn't get the job of "Today" host. He has been mentioned by some NBC executives as a possibility for anchorman of the network evening news, but he says that NBC executives do a lot of that kind of talking but are notoriously short on action.

In fact, Snyder freely concedes that a significant portion of top management believes that "I shoot from the hip or will do anything for a laugh." He argues that his style depends on the format. "Newscenter 4" is loosely structured, each hour offering 15 minutes of hard news at the top, followed by an assortment of features. There is room for improvisation. But the half-hour network news is so tightly put together, he says, that any straying from the script is virtually impossible.

On "Newscenter 4," Snyder strays frequently and with undisguised gusto. When Robert Sarnoff was ousted from the RCA board, parent of NBC, in a surprising coup, Snyder announced that there was a new position-open notice on the studio's bulletin board. Another time, told that the film for a story he had just introduced seemed to be lost, Snyder asked in mock innocence, "Where is it? Over at CBS?" In the middle of a brief item about Nelson Rockefeller selling his Washington home, Snyder broke into a wicked imitation of Rocky. Once, when Dick Schaap confessed sarcastically at 6:30 that no sports news had developed since he appeared at 5:30, Snyder feigned horror: "Don't say that! Make believe like you did an hour ago."

There is a pronounced element of "happy talk" news in this approach, especially in the prolonged and sometimes tedious patter routines between Snyder and Frank Field, the weatherman. But Snyder generally manages to be serious about the serious news. He refuses, however, to be unduly serious about the business and methods of TV news, which he believes is locked into being superficial. When a story is attempted "in depth," Snyder asserts, "everything gets boring." In this sense, he adds, "Newscenter 4," which purports to be offering two hours of "news" each day, is "an impossibility, a con job." It is selling a concept, a set filled with electronic gadgetry and peopled with a certain kind of "family"—himself, Frank Field, friendly sports announcers, tough consumer advocate Betty Furness, and so on.

Some anchormen make a point of stressing their writing contributions to a broadcast, but Snyder is singularly unimpressed by this claim. Given the actual amount of copy involved, he says, the whole thing can be written competently in an hour and a half. Take this contribution to the tightly structured level of network news, where the rest of the job is merely newsreading, and it's obvious that "it doesn't take a lot of energy or talent to do that," he says.

Then there is the future and what Snyder personally sees as the result of the "aging process"—that inevitable moment when the network or station decides "that you're not pretty anymore." That's when "they put you on the ash heap, they shoot you from a cannon." That's what happened, he recalls sadly, to Jerry Dunphy, a former anchorman in Los Angeles. Simply being an anchorman, Snyder says, limits alternatives, hampers flexibility. That is why he has chosen to stake his career on staying with the "Tomorrow" show, which he says is now earning money with an audience of between 5.5 million and 6 million viewers. "Tomorrow" is the experience he has enjoyed most, noting that "there's nobody I won't have on." The format is loose, and every night involves "taking a risk." That is the immediate future after next June 1. NBC can then decide if he should expand his on-camera profile. "If they want me," he says, "they know where I am."

Meanwhile, Snyder cultivates his own distinctive image. Like him or not, it is difficult to ignore him. And he is not timid about expressing himself. Noting that Tex Antoine, the weatherman on a rival newscast, was in danger of being fired following a stupid and insensitive joke about rape, Snyder derided Antoine's more determined critics. "The guy blundered and apologized," he said. "What do they want? His total destruction? None of us is perfect. We all blunder at times. To pretend otherwise is sheer hypocrisy." To a remarkable degree, Snyder seems to be what he projects on a TV screen.

Lord Peter Wimsey Returns,

Followed by Murder

VIVE ETHERIDGE

is evening at 9, the terribly urbane, witty and brilliant amateur detective Lord Peter Wimsey leaves his expensively decorated London flat for a holiday in Scotland. Of course, no Lord Peter and his right-hand man, would be complete, and one turns up already. The dead man is all the most hated man in Wimsey, the glint of justice at his monodic, follows a ve clues. Among the six "Five Red Herring" is the title for the new series that begins on tonight.

Wimsey of literature, one story writer Dorothy L. Sayers, the television version provided by the BBC, one Michael, the British actor of American audiences for captures of daffy Englishmen in various Boulting Brothers films.

Anyone who has seen "Private's Progress" will be hard put to forget the vision of innocent Stanley Windrush, played by Carmichael with a slightly pained expression, announcing to his tough sergeant that he would like to skip morning drill because he woke feeling "rather fragile."

Windrush was resurrected for "Pm All Right, Jack" in which he was pitted against modern institutional organizations with little success. He was nearly consumed by a dough-kneading machine before the film ended.

Throughout the 50's and 60's, Carmichael played a variety of other madcap eccentrics, including Robert Wilton, an expert lecturer on penguins, who was put forward by the Tories to fill a vacant seat in Parliament in "Left, Right and Center."

Carmichael is, in fact, more like the urbane Peter Wimsey than any of his film characterizations. He freely admits "there is quite a lot of me in Wimsey. Where my own personality comes through, it is largely because it coincides with Peter's." Carmichael is also largely responsible for bringing Wimsey to television. It was not, he says, an easy matter.

Ian Carmichael, as sleuth Peter Wimsey, eyes a clue on "Five Red Herring," tonight on Ch. 13.

His struggle to get Peter Wimsey to the television screen began over six years ago when Carmichael received a one-line note from his agent's brother. It simply read "Ian—how about Lord Peter Wimsey for a television series?" Carmichael immediately called Harrod's department store and had them send him the complete works of Dorothy L. Sayers. He sat down and read them all in chronological order, without stopping to read anything else. "I absolutely lapped it up," he recalls.

Then he started to "sell" the idea to television stations. He first went to the BBC, but they weren't interested. Then he went to all the British commercial stations only to find that, for one reason or another, they weren't interested either. Finally, the BBC was persuaded. "From the day I started to sell those books to the first day of rehearsal of the very first episode of the very first book we did was exactly six years. It took a very long time indeed." There is a pause and a smile. "I feel I should be treated like Columbus, really. But I never am."

By American standards, a tremendous amount of time and work goes into the BBC productions. For a 50-minute Wimsey episode, there is a 10-day rehearsal period which includes two days in the studio. Exteriors are shot on film, not videotape, and are therefore done out of sequence and all at once. The interiors are shot in sequence like a play and the filmed segments are slotted in when necessary. Generally speaking, the shooting period covers three months. Preproduction work takes roughly 10 weeks and editing involves two or three weeks, depending on the overall length of the project. A typical American hour series is rehearsed and shot in one week.

In addition to the actual production time, the actors research their parts carefully. Even the accents are accurate, maintaining the verbal idiosyncrasies of the time. "Dorothy L. Sayers always had Peter dropping his last g's in the early novels and this is something I have kept up all the way through," said Carmichael. "I've also added the plummy, upper-class accent that slightly distorts the vowels."

Five of the Wimsey novels have been filmed—American viewers have already seen "Clouds of Witness," "Murder Must Advertise," "The Unpleasantness at the Bellona Club" and "The Nine Tailors"—but as far as Carmichael knows, "there are no plans to

It brought a new scale; the became the object of pressure anyone of the right age, photographer's Grant Building pure Beaux Arts-Deco—sense of both nostalgic fa-similarity and startling rediscovery.

Rediscovery, in fact, is the tacit theme of the show; given their historical relationships, even familiar buildings look new. Suddenly there appears to be more to see and understand in all of the work. And one wants still more—not in the usual way that architectural drawings are shown or published, as random works of art, but as they reveal the aesthetic and intellectual spirit of their time, in a context of continuity and change. The American architectural heritage has grown surprisingly rich and strong.

Jean Shepherd

probably forever identified with it. These days, it isn't necessary to stay up all night to listen to the show, as his dedicated fans did in the mid-50s. Shepherd is now broadcast at a respectable 9:45 P.M.

Listen to almost any Shepherd radio show and one begins to understand what McLuhan meant about a "nightly novel." In one fairly representative 45-minute segment, Shepherd talked about the following topics: portable tape recorders, 1966 Pontiacs and their start-up problems (with sound effects), Rex Reed, fighter planes, Harp beer, James Joyce, famine, unions, P. G. Wodehouse, Groucho Marx, osmosis, evangelical zeal, New Jersey, and the pleasures of speaking French in Mar-selles.

Shepherd doesn't work from a script but it would be incorrect to say that the show is ad-libbed. "I know precisely what I'm going to talk about each time," he said. "None of this is spur of the moment. In fact, I work pretty hard getting the show together—sure, I improvise and digress, but I know the main theme of each show beforehand." Those themes vary from night to night: Army stories, kid stories, serious social analysis, sport tales, literature, movies. It's a multimedia novel, something suitable for a media-drenched society, and Shepherd uses whatever form he has available. He is a tribal story-teller, trying to explain us to us.

THE BLOOMINGDALE INSPECTION

Morley Safer takes you through a shopper's (and merchandiser's) paradise—New York's ultra-chic, ultra-successful Bloomingdale's department store.

And a report from Dan Rather.

Up to $75.00 cash rebate when you buy a Minolta electronic SLR.

Now you have no reason to settle for anything less.

These Minolta electronic 35mm SLR's were designed and engineered to sell for much more. Now, generous cash rebates make it possible for you to own one for close to what you would pay for a mass-produced, economy camera.

Up to $75 cash back on the Minolta XK. The only electronic 35mm SLR with interchangeable finders and focusing screens, plus virtually every convenience and creative feature you can imagine. $75.00 rebate on XK with Auto-Electro head and MC Rokkor-X f/1.7, f/1.4 or f/1.2 normal lens. $65.00 rebate on XK body with Auto-Electro head.

Up to $60 cash back on the Minolta XE-7. The whisper-quiet electronic shutter of this camera responds instantly and automatically to the most subtle changes in light. $60.00 rebate on XE-7 with MC Rokkor-X f/1.7, f/1.4 or f/1.2 normal lens. $50.00 rebate on XE-7 body only.

Up to $40 cash back on the Minolta XE-5. This is a modified version of the XE-7, popular for its remarkably quiet electronic shutter, easy handling and full complement of important operating features. $40.00 rebate on XE-5 with MC Rokkor-X f/1.7, f/1.4 or f/1.2 normal lens. $30.00 rebate on XE-5 body only.

What you pay for your Minolta electronic SLR is between you and your camera dealer. This limited time cash rebate represents additional savings.

You get your cash rebate directly from Minolta when you buy one of these three Minolta electronic SLR's between November 1, 1976 and February 28, 1977. Claims must be postmarked no later than March 15, 1977. This offer applies only to Minolta cameras purchased by a consumer for his or her own use or as a gift and not for resale. Offer good only in the United States, U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. Minolta reserves the right to modify or discontinue it without notice.

For illustrated literature on Minolta products see your dealer or write Minolta Corporation, 101 Williams Drive, Ramsey, New Jersey 07446.

Medieval Arts Dominate Christmas Issues

The heritage of the Middle Ages, which every form of artistic endeavor has devoted to the celebration and veneration of Christianity, has been evoked as the dominant theme of many 1978 Christmas stamps from around the world.

Illustrators worked in gold and brilliant hues on illuminated manuscripts to enhance the contents of the Holy Books. From this Golden Age of book illustration, Sweden has drawn on two late medieval manuscripts in the Stockholm Royal Library to issue four richly multicolored stamps in two denominations. Illustrations from a Flemish prayer book from about 1500 are on 66-øre stamps: one shows St. Nicholas and the other the Archangel Michael. Illustrations from an Austrian prayer book of the late 15th century are on two 1-krona stamps: they show Mary visiting Elizabeth and a text page with prayers to the Virgin Mary.

also been used, with a related scene, for an issue from West Berlin.

A stained glass window of the figure of Christ in the St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Auckland is one of three stamps for the season from New Zealand. The medieval touch is also present on another stamp that bears a Nativity scene, a late 16th century Gothic ivory work by an unknown Spanish artist. The third stamp has a symbolic design for the carol "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing."

From Spain come two stamps picturing carved wooden crib figures: one showing "The Mystery of the Nativity," the other St. Christopher carrying the Christ child. Well paintings in the Church of La Massana, scenes of the Nativity and the Adoration by the Kings, are on a pair from Spanish Andorra. A detail from an altar work of the mid-15th century in the St. Lambert Abbey showing a Nativity scene is on a single from Austria. Cyprus has a set of three reproducing 16th century icons of the Nativity and the Archangels Michael and Gabriel from the Monastery of Ayios Neophytos. From the Cook Islands comes, as usual, a beautiful set reproducing in multi-colored and gold details from 18th sculptured altarpieces depicting the birth of Christ.

Monastic and convent works in wax, a native art of Liechtenstein that developed after medieval times but is related, are depicted on a set of figures from the principality. The creation of the waxes flourished in the 18th and 19th centuries, which wax was not so urgently needed for candles, but has now virtually disappeared. One stamp shows the child Jesus, a wax figure in a glass cabinet; another shows the Flight into Egypt, wax figures in a glass bell; and the other two show the Holy Trinity and the Holy Family, also figures in glass cabinets. The waxes were religious home ornaments or devotional objects. Liechtenstein's first native art, Yule issue featured examples of popular painting behind glass.

Only the far Pacific and a Caribbean island have this year brought forth stamps showing native churches. Tuvalu, formerly the Ellice Islands and joined with the Gilbert Islands, has issued its first Yve stamps on its own. On a set of five, Tuvalu shows churches on the islands of Nukunono, Nui, Vaitupu, and Nannamanga, along with a native-language title page of the New Testament. Nine, on a pair, showed the village church of Avatele and a "Christ mas Tree," what we call a flame tree, or flamboyant, in front of the Administration Building in the main town of Alofi. St. Vincent pictures Roman Catholic and Anglican churches at Kingstown and Methodist and Anglican churches at Georgetown.

Christians would not be Christians without stamps reproducing children's drawings, unfailingly cute. Brazil has a set of five, by children ages 8 to 15, portraying scenes of the Nativity. Four from the Gilbert Islands show children's drawings depicting the church, the meeting home, feasting and dancing. A quartet from Nazari reproduces children's painting of a native choir and angels.

Native settings for the observance of Yule come in both wintry and tropical varieties. A single from Finland shows churchgoers arriving at a sleigh on Christmas morning, while a single from Greenland shows two men and their sled dogs resting on the ice under the pole star.

In contrast there is a carnival atmosphere about three Belaruse prints used on an issue from Jamaica showing gaily bedecked singers, dancers and musicians.

The reproduction of religious paintings by old masters and other painters of the past is a tradition of Christmas. The tradition has been maintained this year by Ireland, Belgium, Monaco, San Marino, Malta, Togo, Mali, Burundi, Penrhyn Island, the New Hebrides, Turks and Caicos Islands, the Bahamas, St. Lucia, Dominica, Grenada and Grenada Grenadines.

its probable Middle East origins, is also well represented. Stained glass, made from melted sand, the humblest of materials, plus coloring substances, at one time equaled diamonds in value. Techniques have changed little from the medieval glaziers who delighted in representations of the Holy Family, the worshipping shepherds, the animals of the stable.

This year's Christmas Stamps from Canada show stained glass windows. On 8-cent and 10-cent stamps, in four colors, are Nativity scenes from windows in St. Michael's Cathedral in Toronto and in the Church of St. Jude in London, Ontario. On a 20-cent stamp, in six colors, is a roundel, an abstract modern work by Yvonne Williams, a Canadian artist who still owns the window.

A quartet of stamps from Gibraltar shows stained glass windows from the Gibraltar Cathedral: the Holy Family, in two different groupings, the Archangel Michael and an angel with a dove.

The Marienfenster, a window dedicated to the Virgin Mary in the Gothic chapel of the Frauenkirche in Esslingen, is depicted on a West German stamp. The window, shaped like a tall drawings, imagery of the Nativity, a set of five, by children ages 8 to 15, portraying scenes of the Nativity. Four from the Gilbert Islands show children's drawings depicting the church, the feeding of the hungry and dancing. A quartet from Mauritius shows children's painting of a nativity choir and angels.

Native settings for the observance of Yule come in both wintry and tropical varieties. A single from Finland shows churchgoers arriving at a sleigh on Christmas morning, while a single from Greenland shows two men and their sled dogs resting on the ice under the pole star.

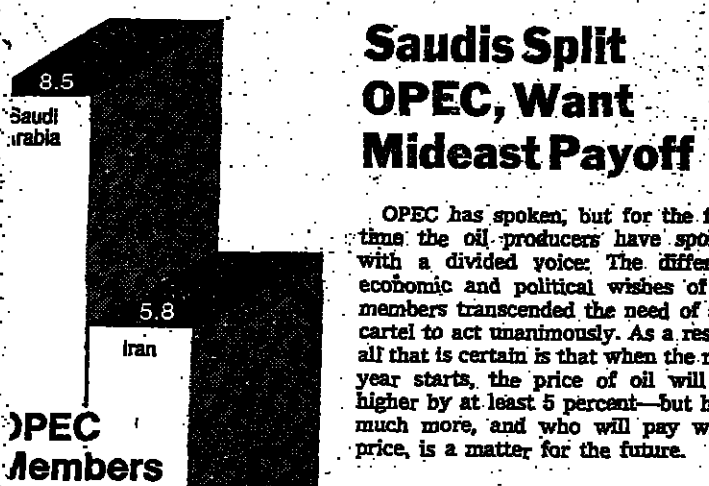

In contrast there is a carnival atmosphere about three Belisario prints used on an issue from Jamaica showing gaily bedecked singers, dancers and musicians.

The reproduction of religious paintings by old masters and other painters of the past is a tradition of Christmas. The tradition has been maintained this year by Ireland, Belgium, Monaco, San Marino, Malta, Togo, Mali, Burundi, Parthny Island, the New Hebrides, Turks and Caicos Islands, the Bahamas, St. Lucia, Dominica, Grenada and Grenada Grenadines.

Oil And Politics

Saudis Split OPEC, Want Mideast Payoff

OPEC has spoken, but for the first time the oil producers have spoken with a divided voice. The different economic and political wishes of its members transcended the need of any cartel to act unanimously. As a result, all that is certain is that when the new year starts, the price of oil will be higher by at least 5 percent—but how much more, and who will pay what price, is a matter for the future.

It was Saudi Arabia, by far the biggest producer in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and, significantly, the strongest influence in Middle East politics, that split with its partners; the United Arab Emirates tagged along. The 11 other members will raise prices 10 percent Jan. 1 and 5 percent more July 1. The Saudis and the Emirates, which together produce 30 percent of the cartel's oil, will impose an increase of only 5 percent Jan. 1.

The oil market: The result will be confusion in the world oil market, probably for months; and there is no certain way to measure the inflationary impact exactly in the rest of the world. The Saudis said they would not only sell cheaper but produce more oil, which they can do; they now pump 8.5 million barrels a day and have the capacity for 11.8 million barrels.

Assuming both factions among the oil nations follow their announced intentions, the international oil companies that buy and market the oil may be able to buy from both sides and sell at an "averaged" price, perhaps representing an increase of about 8 percent over current prices. If that happens for the whole year of 1977, experts estimate, the world's bill for oil will be $3 billion more a year than it now is.

That would mean a substantial addition to inflation in industrial countries (including higher prices for gasoline and heating oil in the United States); an increased and, in many cases unpayable, foreign debt for poorer nations, even though the oil producers promised help, and still greater surplus capital for most oil producing nations.

Why the split? All the oil nations, including the Saudis, maintain that the inflated prices of products they must buy justify a much higher price for oil. The majority of 11 wanted to impose it on that basis and because most have development plans for which they need the money; some have an additional political reason: They are anti-West.

The Saudis saw it otherwise. Economically, they shared the industrial nations' fear that too great a price rise could force those nations back into recession, reducing the demand for oil and, perhaps, decreasing the value of Saudi investments in the West.

But their oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, also made explicit what is always implicit in dealing with the Arab oil producers: the connection between oil price policy and Middle East diplomacy. He said he expected the West to "appreciate" what Saudi Arabia had done, and show its appreciation with help in achieving a Middle East peace settlement. An unskillful translation might read: Since we, the Saudis, have not only kept our price down but helped impose peace in Lebanon, helped control the Palestine Liberation Organization and have made Syria and Egypt more tractable, you, the United States, should now pressure Israel into greater flexibility.

In effect, Sheikh Yamani was addressing Jimmy Carter, the President-elect. Mr. Carter, who in the past has acknowledged he has been in touch with the Saudis, said yesterday there had been no quid pro quo of any kind. He also took the same line publicly that Washington has always taken: There is no connection between oil and diplomatic prices. To say there is would be to invite the Arabs to do again what they have done before, combine the two in an embargo or crippling price rise.

The future. It seems certain that Middle East diplomacy will become one of Mr. Carter's first foreign ventures; the momentum for new talks existed even before the Saudis acted. The oil cartel's future is less sure. The split may be more apparent than real; the Saudis, if they don't like what Mr. Carter does in the Middle East, can always rejoin the cartel majority or simply reduce their flow of oil. Sheikh Yamani himself said: "Don't be too happy in the West. OPEC continues to be strong."

Carter's Instream Men

President-elect Jimmy Carter has had all of his major economic and most of those dealing with foreign affairs and national security in no case has the person chosen the departure from norms Carter's campaign had promised, in every case the nominees from what might be loosely an Establishment background, Carter completed his economic making team by selecting L. Schultz, budget director in son Administration, as chair of the Council of Economic Advisors, the multinational Bendix Corporation as Secretary of the Treasury, B. Lance, a Georgia banker, has been named director of the Office of Management and Budget, high-level economic post.

foreign affairs and national field, Mr. Carter named Igniew Brzezinski of Columbia University as national security adviser representative Andrew Young of who is black, to the secondary Ambassador to the United Nations. Carter had already filled the Secretary of State with Cyrus Vance, a former Johnson Administration official.

Mr. Carter also departed from his original intention of filling economic, defense and diplomatic posts first by naming as Secretary of Transportation Representative Brock Adams of Washington, head of the House Budget Committee, and as Secretary of the Interior Gov. Cecil D. Andrus of Idaho.

Mr. Carter's selections disappointed those who had hoped that at least some of the major positions in his Administration would go to non-traditional choices. He had stressed the importance of bringing outsiders—like himself—to Washington, presumably because they would not share the assumptions that had produced mistakes and failures in the past. But those he has named so far either have served in Washington or are in the categories from which Presidents have customarily drawn their advisers and administrators.

That result may be related to the selection process he has employed. While casting a broad net for suggestions, the President-elect has apparently done so in familiar waters, trying to pick those recognized by and acceptable to established centers of influence, including Congress, organized labor and big business. Unfamiliar names evidently do not survive this screening. Especially, in foreign affairs and national security, where Mr. Carter lacks direct experience, the President-elect may feel more comfortable choosing persons who possess the conventional backgrounds. He chose such persons as campaign advisers as well.

Mr. Carter apparently intends to tap new sources of talent in filling other Cabinet and subcabinet posts. He repeated last week that blacks and women would be among his top aides.

Mr. Carter admitted that he had been turned down by a number of persons, including women and minority group members. Some were unwilling to serve for personal reasons, and some blacks were reluctant to assume positions that they felt would give them responsibility for social problems without the power to solve them.

The policy implications of Mr. Carter's choices as economic advisers seem clear. Unlike the Nixon and Ford Administration counterparts, Messrs. Blumenthal, Lance and Schultz are considered inclined toward active responses to problems, although their activity is likely to be tempered strongly by pragmatism.

The selection of Mr. Brzezinski, along with Mr. Vance, confirms the likelihood that the Carter Administration will depart from its predecessor's policies by diminishing the primacy of United States-Soviet relations and emphasizing more strongly the importance of improving relations among the industrialized nations and between them and the less-developed nations.

Mr. Young's arrival at the United Nations may help. As a black and a strong supporter of black majority rule in southern Africa, he is considered likely to have more influence than his recent predecessors with the underdeveloped nations.

The Early End of Swine Flu Shots

The swine flu vaccination program, the first effort to immunize everyone in the United States for a single purpose at one time, is effectively at an end, far from that ambitious goal. The program was suspended by its Federal managers last week after the latest of a series of small and large problems: This time, the experts acted because they did not know if there was a connection between the immunizations and numerous recent cases of paralysis.

The known facts are inconclusive. Over the past several weeks, 107 cases of Guillain-Barré syndrome, a kind of paralysis that occasionally follows respiratory illness, have been reported in 18 states. Fifty-eight of the victims, including six who died, had had swine flu shots from one to three weeks before they became ill; thirty-three victims had not been inoculated. The status of sixteen cases was not known.

After two days of discussions at the Federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Dr. Theodore Cooper, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, announced that he was suspending the vaccination program "in the interests of safety of the public, in the interest of credibility and in the interest of the practice of good medicine."

Those were, more or less, the reasons the program was adopted in the first place. With one outbreak of swine flu confirmed, President Ford and Congress were advised by experts last March that it was better to finance the program, and risk ill effects, than risk another outbreak. The 1918-19 epidemic, attributed to a virus similar to the one that causes swine flu, killed an estimated 548,000 people in the United States.

But the start was delayed by the refusal of pharmaceutical firms to risk legal liability and of the insurance industry to cover the risk, and then by a shortage of vaccine. A major setback occurred in October after a number of elderly people, considered a high risk group and therefore inoculated first, died. Though the vaccine was not the cause of their deaths, there was an immediate fall-off in those seeking immunization.

Though none of the advisors to President Ford objected to the program, a few other scientists did have reservations, and some have charged that they did not get an adequate hearing. They felt that an epidemic was not a serious threat and there was doubt that, if it were, the vaccine could avert it.

The Federal scientists say they will order resumption of the program if continued testing, expected to take at least a month, shows clearly the vaccine has no connection to the paralysis cases. But even Doctor Cooper acknowledged that it will be "difficult to get the public to take flu shots again." The Government had hoped to have virtually all of the population, well over 200 million persons, inoculated by this time. So far, about 35 million have been.

The New American Establishment Is Called the Community

By LESLIE H. GELB

NGTON—Cyrus R. Vance, Secretary of State-designate Igniew Brzezinski, who will be national security adviser, W. Michael Blumenthal, named Secretary of Defense, Harold Brown, who may be chosen Defense all are part of a small floating group that comes monopolizing the top foreign and national security administration. Known as the foreign policy y, it does not operate as a club of the like-minded piracy or a governing board. It acts more like an y of professionals. Its members sometimes act the decisions, usually define what is to be de-invariably manage the resulting policies.

z of the Community comprises some 300 professors, businessmen, Congressional aides, foundation, thinktank experts and even some journalists. It rated, then subsumed the older and familiar Establishment Wall Street bankers and lawyers.

difficult to compare the power of the Community of the Establishment. What can be said is that its different, more diffuse and makes itself felt in plex ways. For the old Establishment that was led in as Henry L. Stimson, Robert Lovett and John J. foreign policy was essentially a second career.

Their main interest was the interests of business in and out of Government. For most members of the Community, being in government or second-guessing the Government on foreign affairs is a full-time job.

The men of the Establishment were insiders, who knew the right persons to telephone, meeting quietly, avoiding publicity. Most members of the Community operate far more openly. They have to—unlike the Rockefeller, they cannot pick up the phone and speak to the President. They talk to the President indirectly, through the articles they write in journals such as Foreign Affairs and Foreign Policy or in the op-ed pages of this and other newspapers, or in testimony to Congressional committees, through attending conferences with high Government officials at the Brookings Institution in Washington or the Council on Foreign Relations in New York.

As in any group of people seeking power, the premium is still on reputation for judgment and skill in personal relations. But in the post-1950's world, that calls for more than simply fighting wars and doing business, expertise became the ticket to power, and the members of the Community had it.

University men, experts and professors, used to be merely assistants to the men of the Establishment. But with the advent of McGeorge Bundy in the Kennedy Administration, Walt W. Rostow in the Johnson Administration, and finally Henry Kissinger in the Nixon Administration, the professors had moved to the center of power.

These men, and particularly their students and protégés, were not cut from a single socioeconomic mold. The Establishment was wealthy, almost pure WASP, and their views were centrist, cautious, often bipartisan with a slightly Republican cast. The denizens of the Community are Republicans and Democrats and often highly partisan.

There are at least three identifiable groupings of views within the Community. Right of center is the group that looks to James R. Schlesinger, Defense Secretary in the Nixon and Ford Administrations. It still sees power and force as the governing elements of world politics, and still perceives the Soviet Union as an imminent threat to American security. Its adherents seek to increase military spending and get tougher with the Russians. In the center is a group that can be identified with Secretary of State-designate Vance and Mr. Brzezinski. Its adherents are as concerned with relations among industrialized nations and relations between these nations and the developing world as they are with security issues relative to Moscow. They are prepared to play power politics but profess to want to move beyond it. On the left are those who think like Marcus Raskin and Richard Barnett of the Institute for Policy Studies, a private thinktank in Washington. They would restrict the military budget to continental defense, eschew intervention abroad and look to the United Nations to settle disputes and divide the world's riches.

While those on the left are invited to the conferences and can get their articles published in the right journals, they are rarely asked to serve in the Administration. They are still not considered safe or sound enough for real power. But a measure of their influence is that the views of the present center are those which the left expounded ten years ago.

This is not to say that the right and center comprise one happy family. In the last few years, they have been critical of Mr. Kissinger, who fell between the two. In the last week or so, the dispute over the possible reappointment of Mr. Schlesinger to the top Pentagon post was a good measure of the mutual discontent.

But it is from these two groups principally that President-elect Carter and his aides will be drawing to fill the top foreign-policy making positions. In his book on Vietnam, David Halberstam wrote about some of these men and many of their predecessors, calling them "the best and the brightest." He found them cut off from the concerns of the American people, too certain of their judgments and opportunistic. Some of them stayed in government; most did not. Many of them have reformulated their views of the role of the United States in the world. Whether they will operate differently remains to be seen.

In Summary

P.L.O. Switches, Will Accept Palestine State

The leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization have, for the first time, officially said they would accept creation of a Palestinian state, a departure to what has been their essential demand until now: the return of the Palestinians to the land on which Israel was created and, implicitly, the end of the Jewish state.

The declaration, in the context of Middle-East history since the creation of Israel in 1948, is a major event; but, as that history also demonstrates, it is too soon to know whether it is merely a bargaining position or an essential step toward peace. The Palestinians did not describe the borders of the possible future state. Usually, what is meant is the West Bank of Jordan River and Gaza, areas captured and still administered by Israel.

Up to now, Israel's Governments have countered such proposals with a suggestion that the West Bank be reincorporated into a Jordanian-Palestinian federation; strategic military sectors would remain under Israeli control.

Israel reluctance to accept an independent Palestinian state on the West Bank arises from fears that the creation of such a state would only lead to further fighting if militant Palestinians used it as a base for raids. But now, in view of the Palestinians' new position, it is likely that pressures from Washington will be brought upon the Israeli Prime Minister, Yitzhak Rabin, to change his nation's policy.

All the parties involved in the Middle East dispute have said they favor resumption of general peace talks in Geneva, and it is probably there that the Palestinian state issue will be debated. But getting to Geneva is difficult nevertheless. The Israelis have consistently refused to sit down with Yasser Arafat, the Palestinians' leader, and his associates.

Some influential Arab leaders have reportedly suggested that they go to Geneva as one delegation, including the Palestinians, rather than as separate Syrian, Egyptian and Jordanian groups. The Palestinians had previously objected to such a move, but because of their setbacks in Lebanon and Jordan and their present military domination by Syria—and political dependence on Egypt and Saudi Arabia—they now may have to agree.

Britain Cuts Even More

With pressure from two directions—foreign creditors demanding rigorous austerity measures to reduce inflation, and trade-union officials urging that nothing be done to aggravate unemployment—Britain's Labor Government has ordered new economies.

The measures announced last week by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, include a $1.69 billion cut in public spending in fiscal 1977 and a $2.51 billion cut in 1978. New taxes will be levied on cigarettes, beer and whiskey, and the Government will sell part of its holdings in British Petroleum, the giant oil company, to raise perhaps $800 million in cash.

Mr. Healey's cuts are concentrated in defense, foreign aid, education (where school lunch programs will be reduced) and housing, apparently because those were the areas that will least affect jobs.

But the extra penny on new tax on a 50-cent pint of beer and the extra penny or two on a 78-cent pack of cigarettes will not delight the average Briton, whose standard of living was already declining. Imported food has been made more costly by the devaluation of the pound; the removal of subsidies will make it even dearer.

Britain's standard of living has been declining for several years. On the basis of 1970 prices, the average Briton's weekly disposable income dropped from $34.23 per capita in 1973 to $31.34 in 1975.

The measures adopted by Mr. Healey were arrived at only after lengthy debate inside the Labor Party and in the trade union movement that forms its principal base. The Government of Prime Minister James Callaghan has an effective majority of only one seat in Parliament but, while the left wing of the party has complained about the program, it is considered unlikely to vote against it and so turn the Government over to the opposition Conservative party. The Tories have described some of the Government's measures as "a retreat from Socialism" and generally favor even more rigorous austerity.

The British were forced to make the cuts designed to reduce high inflation, to get a $3.9 billion loan from the International Monetary Fund and to meet requests from the United States and West Germany, which also have provided aid. With the pound under extreme pressure, the British had no acceptable option.

Mr. Healey admitted that his program will mean tough times temporarily, but eventually would stabilize the economy and provide the basis for a program of national recovery which will reach a peak when, if things go as expected, Britain's North Sea oil reserves make it self-sufficient in oil by the end of the decade.

Spain Votes To Vote Freely

The Spanish people have voted their approval of a Government plan to replace the Franco-era parliament with a largely elected one next spring, a major step in dismantling the authoritarian system.

But difficult tasks remain: The myriad of political parties that has emerged must organize, the parties must acquire legal status, and campaign rules must be negotiated.

The results of last week's referendum went against the leftists and regional groups who had urged abstention, and the extreme rightists, who had campaigned for "no" votes. More than 77 percent of those eligible voted; 94.2 percent voted "yes," 2.6 percent "no," and the remainder cast blank or invalid ballots.

While the Government victory may have reflected vestiges of Franco-era docility—referendums in 1966 and 1947 were approved by similar margins—full-dress elections are now an approaching reality. The Government has begun discussions with political parties to set campaign procedures and determine access to state-owned radio and television.

There are an estimated 100 to 200 separate parties in Spain, but most are gathering in alliances. Recent polls have set Communist strength at less than 10 percent, the Socialists at 15 percent and the centrist and center-right parties at more than 50 percent. The Government has said all but the Communists may register to run candidates next spring.

Portugal Also Voted

In an election in Portugal, the minority Socialist Government last week received a limited new mandate to address the country's severe economic and social problems. But rival parties also were reinforced by the results and have said they will increase opposition to the Government, which took power four months ago after a series of revolutionary regimes.

In the voting for municipal and regional offices, the Socialists received 33.2 percent, down slightly from the 35 percent they won in national legislative elections last April. The left-of-center Social Democrats were unchanged at 24.3 percent, and the Communists and conservative Social Democratic Center both gained marginally to receive 17.7 and 16.6 percent respectively.

The Government has taken steps to restore order in industry and agriculture, has given priority to construction projects to ease the shortage of housing and schools, and has set aside funds to aid some of the 800,000 refugees from Portugal's former colonies. But foreign reserves have been exhausted since the April, 1974 revolution, investment is stagnant, inflation is running at nearly 25 percent a year and unemployment is at 16.7 percent.

Rhodesian Talks Are Adjourned

The Geneva talks on Rhodesia's future have adjourned without resolving how to accomplish a transition to black majority rule, with great acrimony still marking exchanges between the black and white delegations and relations among the rival black factions.

The British chairman of the talks, Ivor Richard, has announced a post-Christmas trip through southern Africa to plan for a resumption of the talks Jan. 17. But for a number of reasons the conference may not reconvene next month; if it does, the chances that it will be successful appear remote.

As of last week, these were the positions of the parties:

The Rhodesian Government: Prime Minister Ian Smith, determined to safeguard the interests and, for as long as possible, the privileged way of life of Rhodesia's 270,000 whites, has refused to budge from the proposals he accepted from Secretary of State Henry Kissinger last September. The package, which both the United States and Britain have said is negotiable, provides for a two-tier transition government, headed by a council of state to be chaired by a white.

The black nationalists: The four factions represented in Geneva demand control of the transition government, but have been unable to reach a common negotiating position. The faction leaders all want a prominent role in a majority government and have bitterly attacked each other in public statements addressed more to their Rhodesian supporters than to the other parties in Geneva.

The front-line states: Mozambique, Angola, Tanzania, Zambia and Botswana, which have supported the nationalist cause, were instrumental in bringing the factions to Geneva and have a vital role in determining whether Rhodesia will achieve majority rule through war or negotiations. What they will do if the talks collapse is not known. But recent statements have indicated a shift in influence from the relative moderates, such as Zambia, to the militants, such as Mozambique, where most of the Rhodesian guerrillas are based.

South Africa: As Rhodesia's sole acknowledged conduit for commerce and arms, South Africa persuaded Mr. Smith to accept majority rule, but has assured him that so long as he does not precipitate an end to the Geneva talks, it will engage in no boycotts against Salisbury.

Britain: Rhodesia's former colonial ruler has offered to supply a commissioner to oversee a transition government, but neither side has accepted the proposal. Mr. Richard's visit will take him to Rhodesia, South Africa, Tanzania, Zambia and Mozambique.

The United States: The Ford Administration has sent an Assistant Secretary of State to confer with Mr. Richard instead of Mr. Kissinger, tacitly admitting that as a lame-duck Government, its leverage is gone. All parties are awaiting a position statement by the President-elect, Jimmy Carter.

The war: The Rhodesian Army is better equipped and trained than the nationalist forces, and so far has been able to contain them in border skirmishes. But the Rhodesians also have used their air power and gone over the border, as in a strike last week in Mozambique. If the talks in Geneva are not successful, the fighting level is likely to increase.

South African Deaths

Two blacks, an Oxford University graduate and a teacher, were said by the South African police to have committed suicide in jail last week, bringing to 11 the number of deaths among political detainees this year. Six of these have been called suicides. The two, Wellington Tshazibane and George Botha, like most of the reported suicides, had been active in moderate groups working to reform South Africa's apartheid policies.

Another racial moderate, Percy Qoboza, editor of the black newspaper, The World, was held for questioning for eight hours.

An Exchange Of Dissidents

In an unusual trade-off, Vladimir K. Bukovsky, a prominent Russian dissident, has been freed by Soviet authorities and Luis Corvalán Lepe, a longtime leader of the Chilean Communist Party, has been released by the Chilean military regime.

The United States acted as go-between in the complicated negotiations. Neither side stated reasons for the trade-off, but some Westerners in Moscow suggested the release of the

Oil Apart, OPEC Never Forgets Mideast Conflict

By FLORA LEWIS

DOHA, Qatar—The split that occurred last week was not the first in the usually monolithic ranks of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Once before, in 1974, the Saudi Arabians held back over a minimal price increase, though they quickly rejoined the organization majority.

But there is a difference this time, not only in the far more important size of the price gap but in the intense political controversies which underlie their disputes.

There has always been a tangle of political rivalries among cartel members on issues ranging from sheer territorial quarrels (Kuwait and Iraq) through national ambition (Iran and Saudi Arabia) to basic political outlook (eastward-leaning Iraq and Algeria versus the pro-Western Saudi Arabia). This was true among the five founding members of the organization—Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Kuwait, Iran and Venezuela, with the first three deeply engaged in the Arab-Israeli conflict and the latter two unconcerned. It is even more true of the 13 members now, of which five are non-Arab states stretching from the Pacific through Latin America to Africa.

So the theory of the organization required it to assert purely technical and economic ground rules, the common interests of producers against the companies who handle their oil and ultimately the consumers who buy it. Nonetheless, as the strength of the cartel grew, its members became acutely aware of the political power of oil.

Using the 'Oil Weapon'

Algeria's oil minister, Belaid Abdellassam, unwittingly reflected the irony of the continued pretense that the oil organization is only concerned with the marketplace muscle of buyers and sellers at the end of the meeting here last week. Algeria was one of the first to call for use of the "oil weapon" in 1973, hoping to force the United States to abandon Israel during the October war by means of an embargo. When Mr. Abdellassam was asked last week what Saudi Arabia's break on the price front implied for Arab-Israeli negotiations, he replied through tight lips, "OPEC has nothing to do with politics. The decision reflected opposite assessments of the world economic situation."

Those opposite assessments themselves have a political coloring, however. After the oil organization's meeting in Teheran in December 1973, when Saudi Arabia fought unsuccessfully to keep the price from being quadrupled in a year, their oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, told an American official of his distress about the possible impact on the Western world.

"I knew that if you went down, we would go down," he said. Iraq still speaks of the oil cartel as a "vanguard" in the fight "against imperialism and the monopolies." Algeria regards it as a bulwark of the "forces of liberation." Venezuela preaches that it must set the example to the developing world on how to "dignify" the terms on which countries sell their raw materials to the world's suppliers of advanced industrial goods.

But because the Arabs are the core of the cartel, the most emotional political issue in the oil background is the Middle East conflict. Most Americans first became aware of the producers' organization, and its ability to affect their daily lives, as a result of the 1973 embargo.

The embargo didn't achieve its goal of producing an Arab victory, although nobody can be sure what part it may have played in influencing Washington to forestall an Israeli victory by imposing a cease-fire.

One reason why the embargo didn't work was that non-Arabs, particularly Iran, ignored it, happily using the artificial shortage of supply to push up prices. That left strains, although the rivalry between Iran and Saudi Arabia goes much deeper than their attitude towards Arabs and Israelis.

Both are pro-Western and anti-Communist, but the Persian Gulf is narrow and yet fabulously rich. As the two largest states on opposite sides of the Gulf, each has a natural aspiration to dominate the area and a natural resentment when the other emerges from a showdown, such as an oil meeting, as the apparent leader. Even that calculation is complicated, however, by the opposite condition of their pocketbooks. Sparingly populated Saudi Arabia has more money than it can spend. Populous Iran is in deficit, despite the billions it earns from oil. So the Shah has advanced the argument that the West must be saved from using up oil resources too fast lest its wasteful habits leave it a paralyzed, less prey to Communists.

In 1973, the Shah of Iran came out on top because made oil available when the Arabs were cutting it. Now, the Saudis are exuberant but isolated for moment because they are offering cheaper oil. They supply a much larger share of the market than normally hold. Sheikh Yamani made clear he was partly on classic market forces to come to Saudi Arabia, as they did for Iran three years ago. But he equally clear that he was gambling on political tri to break the isolation, and to confirm the Saudi leader of the predominantly Arab Gulf.

The argument, implied if not quite expressed, that threats and bludgeons had failed to bring the a satisfactory settlement in the Middle East, but how oil might do the trick. It has long been the firm of most Arabs, despite flirtations with Moscow, the only way to solve their Israeli impasse is the pressure that Washington can exert on Israel.

Since King Khaled came to the throne, after the assassination of traditional-minded King Faisal, Saudi Arabia has shown an increasing desire to play not only a passive role of friend to the West but also the role of moderator among the eternally feuding Arab states. The King has given many signs that he considers better for the Arabs to seek a favorable settlement Israel and get on with their own development, the hold out for a more complete and emotionally exhilarating victory of arms and diplomacy.

If, as Sheikh Yamani said he expected, the West prelates' cheaper oil enough to extract concessions from Israel, then the Saudis will undoubtedly enter the Arab world as the heroes who knew how to shrewdness, while the militants and the radicals relied on Moscow will appear as futile blusterers. cess does succeed, in any culture.

But exactly what is success in the Middle East? There remain the hotly divisive issues of Palestinians, reflected among the Arab states the complex prisms of their broader rivalries, an what would constitute a "just" settlement with Israel.

Dealing With Israel

Iraq and Libya, with occasional shoves from Alg all oil cartel members, have lent their backing to most adamant Palestinian groups still insisting any acceptance of Israel's existence is defeat for Arabs. That probably is not the primary reason they opposed the Saudi decision on oil prices, but gave strong psychological self-justification to stance.

It is the Saudis, on the other hand, who have tributed the bulk of the funds to both Egypt and Syria for wars and their devastating aftermath, and seem to have come to the conclusion that fighting what will make the Arabs flourish. Saudi Arabia pla the decisive role in ending Lebanon's civil war, in try to mediate the Algerian-Moroccan conflict over Sahara, and now in promoting Arab-Israeli negotiati.

Of course, the desire for peace is not a settlement. Neither the Israelis nor the Saudis would dream peace at any price, and the suspicious and conflicts aspirations are so profound that even utmost since on both sides could not by itself end the peren threat of war.

It is symptomatic of the modern world with intricate web of both vast and local interconnect in alliance and in hostility, that the price of oil reflects so many different tensions and ambitions.

The 11 oil cartel members which held out against Saudi Arabia's enormous economic power and its threat to their expected earnings do not agree among themselves on many other issues. The Saudis are closer to some of their opposition than to others, have political goals more in common with them than with some goals of American policy.

Sheikh Yamani, announcing his oil decision in a mood of high good humor and confidence, still warned West not to be "too happy because it will be misled" always in the Middle East, the lines of division brittle if sharp. Oil can nudge them one way or another.

France: No More A-Plants for Sale

France, under pressure from the United States and other major suppliers of nuclear technology to halt exports of nuclear fuel-reprocessing plants, has announced it will no longer sell such facilities, which yield by-products that can be diverted to make atomic bombs.

The decision, disclosed last week, leaves West Germany as the sole substantial exporter of reprocessing facilities. But Bonn has also been pressed by the United States and Canada, among other nations, to ban further such exports and cancel a planned sale to Brazil.

French nuclear industry officials have urged increased international cooperation to check the spread of nuclear weapons. He said recently the world would pursue this goal, after his in-urition, through "normal diplomatic persuasion."

So Far, Hua Maintaining A Calm Hold On the Helm

By FOX BUTTERFIELD

HONG KONG—A Western diplomat traveling in China was surprised recently when his guide in Nanking confided, "The day we learned Chiang Ching had been arrested, not a bottle of alcohol was left in the city."

Something like national euphoria, in fact, seems to have possessed many Chinese in October after the downfall of Miss Chiang, Mao Tse-tung's widow, and three other high Communist Party members now described as sham revolutionaries. It was partly relief, a sense that the years of disruptive political conflict since the Cultural Revolution of the 1960's might finally be over, and partly expectation that China's new leaders might raise the standard of living, offer better education and greater creativity in the arts.

For correspondents who cover China from the outside, by interviewing diplomats who have been in China and Chinese travelers and monitoring radio broadcasts and official newspapers, it is still too early to tell whether Hua Kuo-feng, the new Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, will fulfill those aspirations.

In the two months since his elevation, however, it is apparent that Mr. Hua has moved with a mixture of caution and decisiveness to try to restore China to a course of political stability and orderly economic growth, much like that advocated until his death last January by Prime Minister Chou En-lai.

As a first step, Mr. Hua and his allies among China's veteran party bureaucrats and army commanders have begun a major reshuffle of senior party and government posts, ousting several ministers who were personally too close to the purged radicals, such as Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan-hua. A similar purge is under way in the provinces, where followers of Miss Chiang, according to the Chinese press, had caused constant disruption, trying to oust the regular provincial authorities with tactics ranging from wall poster attacks to open violence and even kidnapping.

When these changes have been worked out, perhaps late in the winter, the speculation is that Mr. Hua will summon a full meeting of the party Central Committee or a party congress to anoint the new lineup, which will probably include Li Hsien-shan, a veteran economic planner, as Prime Minister.

When a new Politburo, the ruling council of party leaders, is selected to replace the present one that has been reduced from 21 to 12 members by death and purges, it is believed that it will include a large number of army leaders. The army played a key role in Mr. Hua's elevation in October, and several senior military figures, such as Su Yu and Hsu Hsiang-chien, both vice-chairmen of the powerful Military Affairs Commission, have evidently assumed important positions in the party.

At the same time, Mr. Hua apparently has been trying to get China's flagging economy back on track. It now appears that 1976 will be something of a lost year economically because of the party power struggles, labor unrest and factional disputes in factories. For all of this, whether rightly or wrongly is not known, Miss Chiang and her companions are being blamed.

Judging from recent work stoppages reported in some key industries, such as the railroads and iron and steel, many Chinese apparently would like Mr. Hua to raise wages, which have not increased much since the early 1960's. But that would be expensive, and it would mean a major reversal of Maoist policies. Instead, Mr. Hua, a career party administrator, seems to be stressing better management. The Chinese press has been full of injunctions for tighter discipline, less disruption, better accounting procedures and even an insistence on profits for individual factories. The first quotation attributed to Chairman Hua, after years of revolutionary rhetoric by Mao, is suggestive: "Be meticulous in organization and direction."

But the question remains whether such measures, without increased material incentives, will be sufficient to overcome the mood of apathy and cynicism which apparently has overtaken China in the past few years.

In some other fields, Mr. Hua may break more clearly with Maoist orthodoxy. In foreign trade, for example, Miss Chiang and company already have been assailed for distorting Mao's policy of self-reliance into a "closed door policy." Large scale purchases of Western technology to speed China's industrial development are expected to resume next year.

To achieve the late Prime Minister Chou's goal of modernizing China by the year 2000, Mr. Hua also seems likely to return to a somewhat more conventional education system that gives greater stress to academic subjects, especially science. Already the Chinese press has condemned Miss Chiang's group for claiming that "study is useless."

China's armed forces also may get a larger budget to improve their outmoded tanks, planes and rockets as Peking's new leaders move away from Mao's belief that men, not weapons, are the critical factor in war. As a possible indication of such a departure, China last month exploded a large hydrogen bomb and launched a space satellite.

One of the most curious findings of the analysts who have followed the tumultuous events in China in the last few months has been that the real divisive issues in Peking apparently were the personal ambitions and disruptive tactics of Miss Chiang's group, rather than their ideology.

The so-called radicals, who were from Shanghai, China's largest and most sophisticated city, were always better dressed and groomed than their rivals among the veterans of the Long March. As one Western diplomat remarked, "They were really China's beautiful people, and played at politics."

The ultimate winner was their arch-enemy, Prime Minister Chou. Portraits of Mr. Chou have begun appearing for the first time in Chinese offices, and in Nanking, where Mr. Chou once tried to negotiate with the late Nationalist Chinese leader, Chiang Kai-shek, workers are fixing up the house where Mr. Chou stayed. The anniversary of his death is next month.

Hanoi's Is a Flexible Brand of Socialism

By NAYAN CHANDA

HONG KONG—When the Communists ruling North Vietnam held their last party congress 16 years ago, they approved plans to fight for control of the South while at the same time building socialism in the North. With the divided nation now one after a protracted and devastating war, the Vietnam Workers' Party met again in Hanoi last week to make final a new socialist course for North and South.

Like the battle strategy that eventually brought victory in the war, the party's projected path to socialism is very much its own. It may be described as a flexible one, geared to Vietnam's need to revive and expand its economy and to seal the reunification in both practical and ideological terms. Foreign capitalists and even the former bourgeois managers of Saigon have been allotted roles in the scheme of socialist construction.

A recent Government announcement in Ho Chi Minh City (Hanoi's name for Saigon) said a number of private traders who had flourished under the "U.S.-puppet regime" would be used as agents for state-operated trade. The unified country has joined the International Monetary Fund and the Asian Development Bank, while remaining just an observer in the Moscow-dominated economic alliance, Comecon. And an investment code allowing business ventures with minority or even full foreign ownership is being completed.

All this does not mean that the veteran revolutionaries of Hanoi are abandoning socialist goals for a mess of pottage at the capitalist table. Instead, freed from the exigencies of war that limited domestic and foreign policy options, Hanoi is embarking on its own path toward socialism set to make use of all available means.

A political report submitted to the party congress by Secretary Le Duan stressed that technological progress was the keystone of Vietnam's plan to build socialism. Given the reluctance, and, in some cases, inability of many of the country's allies to provide needed capital and technical assistance, and Vietnam's desire for independence in the Communist bloc, Hanoi is looking to the West for significant aid.

As Hanoi sees it, however, no country has a greater ability or more valid reason to come to its assistance than the United States. Although the Vietnamese do not appear seriously to believe that the $3.2 billion supposedly pledged by the Nixon Administration for reconstruction after the signing of the Paris peace accords will be forthcoming, they expect Washington to accept some moral obligation to repair the country.

The United States has tied the aid issue to demands for what it considers a full accounting of the 500 Americans still listed as missing in action in Vietnam, but diplomatic discussions have begun in Paris that may resolve the dispute. [A Congressional committee said last week that there was no evidence that any of the missing Americans were still alive.]

Whether or not aid is provided, a lifting of the United States embargo on trade with Vietnam will permit American companies to resume offshore oil exploration and provide needed spare parts for equipment inherited by Hanoi from the Saigon regime.

Unsure of American help and realizing that, with the war over, they can no longer count on substantial, non-refundable Communist aid, Vietnamese leaders are giving priority for the immediate future to consumer and export goods to satisfy some of the postwar expectations of the population and accumulated domestic savings and credits.

Indochina Is Adjusting To Peace

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN

BANGKOK, Thailand—Thailand, Laos and Cambodia a common frontier of 1,500 miles and, though their philosophies and world outlooks differ sharply, for eighteen months, they have also shared a chance to accommodate themselves to a reunified and Vietnam.

Each country has had internal difficulties. The line of successive Thai administrations led to a militancy over two months ago. By most reports, hundreds of thousands of Cambodians have died in the struggle for self-sufficiency. Serious shortages in food and other essentials accompanied the transition to Communist rule. Overshadowing internal changes, however, has been the question of what direction Vietnam, still the strong military and economic power in Indochina, the answer, from Vietnam's party congress last week was one of moderation, even with Thailand, where Vietnam as a term trade, economic and even political interests accommodation, Vietnam apparently hopes to gain partners and technical expertise as well as an aid that the conversion of the five-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations into an anti-Communist military does not materialize.

Since the Vietnam war ended 18 months ago, the three nearest neighbors have sought to reconcile particular circumstances with the new situation in Indochina.

Thailand: Prior to Oct. 6, Thailand's approach to was one of conciliation under Prime Minister Kukrit and his successor and elder brother, Seni. With the military presence gone from mainland Southeast Asia, two felt that some sort of détente was necessary immediately, if not long-term, survival of Thailand.

Initial Thai approaches immediately after the war, but then the atmosphere began to thaw this year, full diplomatic relations were established. The two countries began to talk in terms of trade and economic benefits, including the reopening of the old air corridor across Vietnam for planes flying to Hong Kong route.

But many Thai domestic problems only peripheral to Indochina remained unresolved. They range from unemployment, to rising prices to a vestige of left position and a right-wing military that still regard the enemy.

Noisily Anti-Communist

The October coup, which brought to power first a junta, then the military-backed right-wing Government Prime Minister Thanin Kraivichien, reversed much progress of the last year. In the face of increasing military statements by the new Thai Government, shelved plans to exchange ambassadors. The Thai has become more noisily anti-Communist as its resolve any of the domestic crises that confront predecessors becomes increasingly apparent.

Laos: Some of its principal difficulties developed a year as a result of a series of confrontations with Vietnam. The clashes resulted in a closing of the long frontier between the two countries, and a near-total Thai blockade on food and fuel, on which landlocked Laos depends.

When relations between Thailand and Vietnam thawed, the border was reopened and the serious hardships and resulting domestic discontent that marked the first year of Communist rule in Laos eased.

At the same time, the blockade had had the effect of prying loose more economic aid from Vietnam.

Laos is a close ally of Vietnam and demonstrates support for Hanoi, and need for its assistance, at a recent nonaligned conference in Sri Lanka. While a Thai delegation was silent on the issue, the Thai loudly denounced the Association of Southeast Asian in Hanoi's stead.

Cambodia: Since the change to Communist rule, Cambodia has been one of the world's great enigmas. Rumor float that as many as one million persons, from a population of eight million, have died, from starvation, disease, execution. But there is no hard evidence of this and it is strictly rumor.

Cambodia has no known close allies, least of all Vietnam, with which it shares a traditional racial hatred. It appears willing to provide some limited assistance in the form of rice and some technical experts.

Four months ago, before the Thai coup, Thailand ruffled diplomatic relations with Cambodia and a trickle of goods has begun to flow across the border at Aranyaprathet. In recent weeks, there have been reports that Cambodia has re-established some other link with the outside world, opening a small trading post in Hong Kong and even placing orders with an American company.

David A. Andelman is a correspondent for The New York Times, based in Bangkok.

Apart from a giant hydroelectric project to be completed in 10 years, Soviet aid is in mining and metallurgical installations, not in steel or engineering. Vietnam, prefer, China is continuing assistance for agricultural projects and construction of a bridge, and to have halted what had been a regular flow of goods and other staples during the war.

"We must realize the changes in international situation," wrote Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh in a recent article in a party journal. "On this basis, we more strongly emphasize our policy of self-reliance in every effort to produce a large volume of export goods."

The success of investment in light industry depends largely on whether Hanoi can obtain the economic cooperation of the farmers and businessmen in the South. As a sign of the leadership's flexible approach, reunification, Western companies have been encouraged to invest in the South, while Eastern efforts are concentrated in the more ideologically pure North.

Some coordination in production has begun between North and South—northern fertilizer is being used in the Mekong delta paddies and southern consumer goods meet northern needs—but complete reintegration of the nation, split for two decades, is still far away.

Socialist re-education in the South and economic development throughout the country may eventually reduce the divides. In a way, the 20-year program outlined by Hanoi building a modern socialist state is also the timetable accomplishing a true unification of the two Vietnams.

Indochina
Is Adjusting
To Peace

Five Years Ago a New Nation was Born

THE UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Today it looks with Pride on its Achievements and in Confidence to its Future

The United Arab Emirates, a new nation, was formed by the union of seven Emirates occupying a semi-circle along the southern coast of the Arabian Gulf. This union was a formal one, bringing together of equal size and comparable resources, but it was also a union of peoples who had lived in relative isolation and who had been ruled by different dynasties. The United Arab Emirates, a new nation, was formed by the union of seven Emirates occupying a semi-circle along the southern coast of the Arabian Gulf. This union was a formal one, bringing together of equal size and comparable resources, but it was also a union of peoples who had lived in relative isolation and who had been ruled by different dynasties.

On the contrary, there could hardly have been greater diversity. The immense wealth of Abu Dhabi in particular, a fertile land of Ras al-Khaimah, a small fishing and agricultural area of Fujairah, Umm al-Qaiwain, a small and rich, and poor, and a pastoral, the seven Emirates combined to form a nation with a common base and with all the necessary for future development.

The United Arab Emirates celebrated its fifth anniversary in the early months of this year. The new nation has only been established on a basis which its own prosperity and confidence in its own future.

The union was founded five years ago, but there would be no revenue from the great oil resources. There was a shortage of people, and the living standards for the seven Emirates were low. The United Arab Emirates, a new nation, was formed by the union of seven Emirates occupying a semi-circle along the southern coast of the Arabian Gulf. This union was a formal one, bringing together of equal size and comparable resources, but it was also a union of peoples who had lived in relative isolation and who had been ruled by different dynasties.

Today over 5,000 teachers are working in UAE schools and the number of pupils is 61,800. The Ministry of Education has recently completed plans for the building of 117 new schools and 30 kindergartens, as well as hundreds of sports centers, swimming pools and facilities for football, gymnastics, athletics, basketball, etc. Some of the effort being put into education can be seen from the expenditure figures: Dh 89 million in 1973, Dh 321 million in 1974 and Dh 476 million in 1975.

While top priority goes to primary education, secondary and university education are also regarded as of great importance. In 1974, 1,800 students were studying abroad, and the first UAE university is scheduled to open in 1977.

Housing too is proceeding apace. Initially, the need has been for relatively low-cost but modern and well equipped dwellings to cope with the acute housing shortage caused by rising living standards and large-scale immigration. This is being dealt with both by traditional on-the-spot building supervised by experienced contractors and by the establishment of a factory for the manufacture of prefabricated houses. International experts on landscaping and town planning are helping with the urbanization program.

Construction of hospitals, roads, docks, airfields and water storage tanks have a high priority. All public telecommunications have come under the control of The United Arab Emirates Telecommunications Corporation, which is rapidly expanding both television and the direct dialing telephone system. Senior government officials have discussed with American experts plans for transmission by satellite and the UAE is one of five countries represented on the board of the Arab Organization for Space Communications, which is studying all aspects of this subject.

Priorities for Development — a Formidable Program

Apart from the maintenance and expansion of the oil industry the main task is to tackle the problems of the new State. The foundation five years ago were: education, housing, water supply, communications, social welfare, industry and the development of agriculture and fisheries. In addition, the object which the government set itself was to use the revenues from oil in a way as to lay the foundations of a new nation, while raising the standard of living of its peoples as quickly as possible. It is also a task which will be tackled as the oil industry grows and as the oil industry grows and as the oil industry grows.

In this formidable program, progress has already been made in a short time. The Emirates themselves did not contain sufficient manpower or sufficient know-how to accomplish the many tasks without help from outside. Schools, teachers, doctors, technicians, all kinds of many countries were quick to seize the opportunity of coming to work in a land which promised so much. As a result, the population has almost doubled in the past five years to its present figure of approximately 890,000.

Education and Housing

However welcome these immigrants may be, the first aim must of course be the future prosperity of the indigenous people themselves and this means that education has a very high priority.

In 1952 not one single school existed in any of the seven Emirates which make up the UAE. By 1968 there were thirty-five schools with a total of 10,549 pupils, including Abu Dhabi which had 11,000 pupils in schools by 1971 when the United Arab Emirates were formed.

Today over 5,000 teachers are working in UAE schools and the number of pupils is 61,800. The Ministry of Education has recently completed plans for the building of 117 new schools and 30 kindergartens, as well as hundreds of sports centers, swimming pools and facilities for football, gymnastics, athletics, basketball, etc. Some of the effort being put into education can be seen from the expenditure figures: Dh 89 million in 1973, Dh 321 million in 1974 and Dh 476 million in 1975.

Housing too is proceeding apace. Initially, the need has been for relatively low-cost but modern and well equipped dwellings to cope with the acute housing shortage caused by rising living standards and large-scale immigration. This is being dealt with both by traditional on-the-spot building supervised by experienced contractors and by the establishment of a factory for the manufacture of prefabricated houses. International experts on landscaping and town planning are helping with the urbanization program.

Construction of hospitals, roads, docks, airfields and water storage tanks have a high priority. Senior government officials have discussed with American experts plans for transmission by satellite and the UAE is one of five countries represented on the board of the Arab Organization for Space Communications, which is studying all aspects of this subject.

Six new industrial and construction projects costing Dh 45 million are being financed by the UAE Development Bank. These include an aluminum plant at Abu Dhabi, a textile factory at Abu Dhabi, a dockyard and a marble factory at Ajman. The port facilities at Dubai have been greatly expanded to cope with the rapid increase in two-way trade. In addition, hundreds of loans have been granted to individuals and small companies for various industrial projects.

Making a Garden from a Desert

All of these are exciting new developments, but what of support for the older, more traditional means of livelihood? A few years ago, extensive agriculture in this arid region was regarded as impossible, but today the area through which one drives from Abu Dhabi City to Al-Ain, for instance, is a tree-lined avenue bordered by experimental farms and deer parks — the start of a multi-million dollar project of agricultural development and afforestation which aims to make the United Arab Emirates self-sufficient for most of its food as well as creating a truly beautiful landscape. The very latest techniques in irrigation and water conservation which are being applied in the Emirates can make this transformation a practical reality, as has been demonstrated by the experimental work already carried out.

Fishing, too, is being carried on by scientific studies of the habits and seasonal movements of fish and by financing the design and construction of modern boats suitable for these waters.

Finance and Banking

The 1976 Union Budget allocated Dh 1,797 million for Government Projects: Dh 396 m for Communications, Dh 327 m for Water and Electricity, Dh 288 m for Housing, Dh 281 m for Education, Dh 96 m for Health, Dh 51 m for Agriculture and Fisheries and Dh 51 m for Public Affairs. Other items totalled Dh 84 m.

When the United Arab Emirates Currency Board was set up in 1973 its first task was to introduce the new UAE currency unit, the Dirham, which is today one of the hardest currencies in the world. The Currency Board already performs some of the functions of a Central Bank and may well develop further in this direction.

In 1975 there were six locally incorporated banks and 14 foreign commercial banks in the UAE. Business expansion on the huge scale of the past three years has needed greatly increased financial services and banks have proliferated to a point where the Currency Board put a stop to the issuing of full banking licenses for a period of two years from April 20th 1976. However, the Board will consider applications from a limited number of international banks to operate a specialized and limited service to facilitate international trade.

Co-operation in finance with other Arab countries is facilitated by the Arab Monetary Fund, which was created early in 1976 and has its headquarters in Abu Dhabi.

The IMF's role is complementary to that of the IMF in that its first aim is to stabilize Arab currency exchange rates by supplying credits to cover balance of payments deficits where necessary.

The AMF was created with an initial capital of about $900 million, based on 25 million units designated the Arab dinar and worth about $3.60 each. The Arab dinar is seen as a possible future pan-Arab currency in which Arab oil prices would be fixed. In the mean time the AMF is performing a useful function in co-ordinating inter-government financial transactions in the Arab world.

Protecting the UAE to the World

For a newly founded nation it is clearly important that accurate information about the country, its people, its aims and its achievements should be disseminated abroad.

The primary channel of communication with other governments is, of course, the diplomatic service, and the UAE embassies, which have been opened in a number of major countries and which will undoubtedly increase in number, also provide information to the media and to the general public of the countries where they are established.

Another means of promoting knowledge of the UAE abroad is by taking part in exhibitions and fairs. For instance, in May of this year the United Arab Emirates won two gold medals at the Paris International Fair which was visited by over one and a half million people. The medals were awarded for the best presentation of information media and cultural development. In July the UAE participated in the Chicago Trade Fair, where its exhibit aroused much favourable comment.

Another important step was taken this year in spreading news of the United Arab Emirates abroad with the establishment of two news agencies. The UAE News Agency and the Gulf News Agency. The former is purely a UAE enterprise while the latter is shared with several other Arab states.

Generous Aid to Third World Nations

It is a cardinal principle of President Sheikh Zayed and the other rulers who are members of the Supreme Council of the UAE that the nation's new-found wealth is to be shared with others less fortunate than themselves. They have not forgotten what it was like to be poor and the hard struggle of their peoples to maintain a subsistence level is still fresh in their memories.

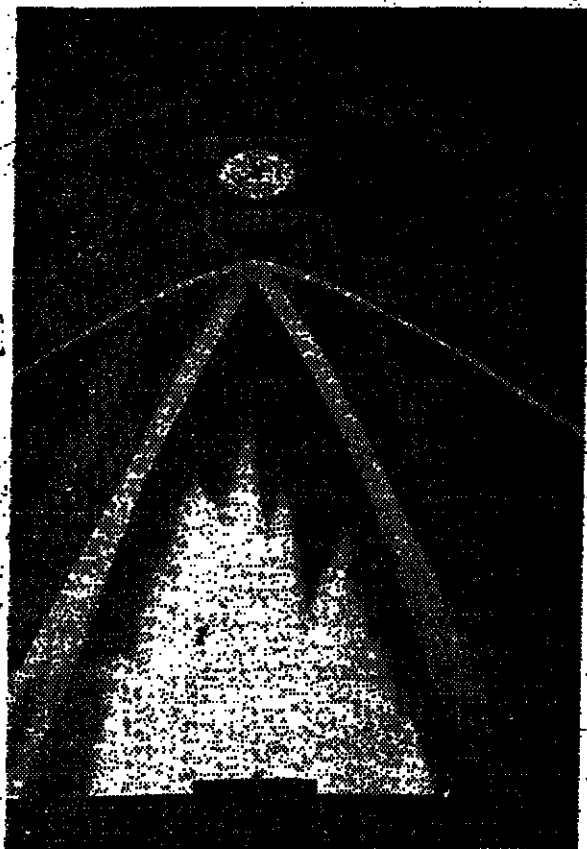

International aid is organized partly through the Abu Dhabi Fund for Arab Economic Development (ADFED), which now has a capital of $500,000,000. Designed originally to help Arab nations in need, its aims as well as its resources have been greatly expanded and a number of African and Asian states are already receiving aid or are scheduled to do so in the near future.

It is fundamental to all aid granted by ADFED that there are no political strings attached; not more than 10% of the Fund's total financial resources may be invested in any one project and the Fund may not provide more than 50% of the total finance of any one project. Its activities go beyond the mere provision of money — vitally important though that is to the recipients — for ADFED co-operates with Western countries in order to offer to third World nations a package which will provide both the financial and the technical knowledge and resources to ensure the successful outcome of the project.

International aid provided by ADFED in the form of loans and grants to developing nations amounted in 1975 to $1,343,000,000. When aid takes the form of loans, interest rates are very low by world standards and the repayment period can in some cases run to as much as 25 years.

No other country in the world is making so great a contribution to international aid in proportion to its Gross National Product as the United Arab Emirates. While few Western nations have reached their target figure of 1%, the average for OPEC states is 0% and the UAE's contribution in 1975 was no less than 25% of its GNP.

STATEMENT ON JEWS AND ISRAEL

Reverend Sun Myung Moon

Jewish Brethren:

On September 18, 1976, at our God Bless America Festival at the Washington Monument, in the presence of an estimated 300,000 people, we stated:

[Judaism, Christianity and the Unification Movement] are indeed three brothers in the Providence of God. Then, Israel, the United States and Korea, the nations where these three religions are based must also be brothers. Because these three nations have a common destiny representing God's side, the Communist bloc as Satan's representative is trying to isolate and destroy them at the U.N.

Therefore these three brother nations must join hands in a unified effort to restore the United Nations to its original purpose and function. They must contribute internally to the unification of world religions and externally to the unification of the world itself.

(cf. our advertisement in The New York Times, Sept. 24, 1976)

And yet, in spite of this clear and explicit statement, we were attacked repeatedly and accused of anti-Semitism. Our views were distorted, our struggle, its meaning and objectives misrepresented.

On the occasion of these Hanukkah Days, the Festival of Light and commemoration of your victory over the forces of darkness and evil, we wish to clarify our genuine convictions and express our honest and sincere feelings toward you, Jewish Brethren.

Towards this end and purpose we publish herewith and bring to your attention the document signed on August 10, 1976.

In the course of their history the people of Israel and Korea have experienced suffering and persecutions by neighboring enemies and expanding imperialistic powers.

As a son of the Korean people, living in this blessed by God land of America, I extend to you, Jewish Brethren, my hand of friendship and wish to state the principles which are guiding the activities of our Movement, especially those regarding the problems and difficulties confronting the Jews of the World and Israel at this crucial juncture of our common human history.

1. The Unification Movement categorically condemns anti-Semitism, the most hideous, abject and cruel form of hatred. We regard the murder of six million Jews in Europe the result of political short-sightedness and lack of moral responsibility on the part of Germany's political and religious leaders, and statesmen from among other nations, in the period between the Two World Wars. Ignoring the basic teachings of the Scriptures, they acted too late to block Hitler's ascent to power, they postponed the action for his downfall, and they did nothing to rescue the victims who were the captives of his satanic plans and designs. Only a unified front of all Christian and Jewish forces, inspired by the principles of the Divine Commandments and guided by the concept of human brotherhood, would have been able to prevent the Holocaust, the implementation of the "Final Solution,"—a Cain-inspired action, carried out by the Nazis between 1933 and 1945.

2. The Unification Movement recognizes the divine and natural right of the Jewish people to physical survival and preservation of its specific religious traditions, the marks of its distinctive historical entity. These fundamental human rights must be secured everywhere, especially for Jews living in the lands of the Diaspora.

3. The Unification Movement regards the Land of Israel as a haven for the Holocaust survivors and sanctuary for all those individual Jews who are trying to escape physical persecution and religious, racial or national oppression. The demand for free emigration—the undeniable and inalienable right of every human being—must become the stated policy of the United States in her dealings with foreign countries, and particularly in her relations with the Soviet Union.

4. The Unification Movement, in its efforts to resolve conflicts among nations and harmonize antagonistic social-economic and political interests, will work toward the creation of political conditions necessary for an acceptable accommodation between the Arabs and Jews, and to achieve a genuine and lasting peace in the Middle East, one of the most important corners of the world.

5. The Unification Movement believes that religious and free people throughout the world must cooperate in building a spiritual and organizational unity among nations which will be capable to contain Soviet imperialism, which continues to inflict hardship and suffering upon its own people and is spreading the poison of hatred and dissension among nations of the world, with the ultimate purpose of political global subjugation and enslavement.

6. The Unification Movement is grateful to God, to His true and righteous prophets and saints of our common spiritual tradition who prepared the foundations on which we stand and organize our struggle. We consider ourselves to be the younger brother of our Jewish and Christian brethren, all of whom are children of our Heavenly Father. We regard it as our duty to respect and serve the elder sons of our Father, and it is our mission to serve Judaism and Christianity by promoting Love and Unity among all the children of God.

7. The Unification Movement teaches the Principle and strives toward the establishment of a Unified World Family of Nations guided by the concepts of Unity and Brotherhood expressed in the Divine Commandments, the foundations of our common spiritual heritage. It is our conviction that we must unite in order to attain this Divine and Sublime Historical Objective.

City's Creditors Insisting City Pay Up

New York City has yet to produce a satisfactory plan to pay off owners of $1 billion of its notes, something it must do by a court order that cannot be appealed, and the noteholders have now returned to court to get the city moving.

The events were reminiscent, to some extent, of an old scenario, in which the city goes to banks and pension funds for cash and faces bankruptcy when the help is insufficient. In the last scene, it is pulled from the edge of the abyss, largely with the help of the Federal Government.

Whether that is about to happen again is not certain, but it is clearly possible and it becomes more likely as time passes and other solutions do not materialize.

The city did advance a proposal last week, but it did not guarantee full cash payment to the noteholders and also required the purchase of more city securities by banks and city employee pension funds.

Both the banks and the pension funds said a qualified no, and the qualification may have been meaningful. They said they didn't know enough detail, especially what the Federal Government's role might be. That probably means they want to know if the Federal Government is going to guarantee any new bonds.

The city also got a rejection from Arthur Richenthal, the attorney speaking for those owed the $1 billion; he says they want cash.

Mr. Richenthal has now gone back to the Court of Appeals, and the city must offer a new proposal, find a way to raise the cash, or ask for more time. It can probably get it. The court has said that any payment plan must not undermine the city's program for financial recovery.

The city continues working on that recovery. Mayor Beame last week promised to freeze real estate taxes for five years to keep homeowners and businessmen from leaving the city and further eroding the city's tax base. He didn't say where else he would get the money that has come from the customary annual rise in the tax.

The Transit Authority has submitted to the Emergency Financial Control Board its fourth plan for budget cuts for this year and next. Much of the plan was contingent on additional state and city aid, which so far has not been promised, and the proposal may not be any more acceptable than the first three.

P.S.C. Paying—Attention

The New York State Public Service Commission apparently intends to scrutinize requests for utility rate increases in more detail than has been usual. The commission last week summarily rejected an application for an increase submitted by the New York Telephone Company, primarily on the ground that the company had not supplied cost studies that would have helped determine how the increase might have been distributed among types of telephone customers.

The commission wants the data because Alfred E. Kahn, unlike his predecessors as chairman, believes that it is properly the commission's prerogative, not the company's, to decide how increases should be apportioned among business and residential customers. One of the commission's main concerns recently has been to keep residential service at what it considers reasonable cost levels.

The last time it granted an increase, in November, 1975, the commission ordered the phone company to place most of the burden on business customers. The order was based on a commission staff study which found that residential users were, in effect, subsidizing business service.

The commission had warned the company that future applications for an increase should contain similar cost studies, but the company, apparently believing the commission's request an infringement, maintained that its application was adequate.

Although commission decisions on rate increases are reviewable by the courts, the company is expected to resubmit the application for a $393 million increase, with the requested information rather than attempt a legal challenge. One factor militating against such a challenge is that it would take a long time; giving the commission what it wants would probably result in an increase relatively quickly.

No-Fault's Apparent Faults

New York State's no-fault auto insurance system, which has been in effect for almost two years, has apparently failed to achieve two of its main objectives, reducing accident litigation and lowering insurance rates. The reasons for the failure, state insurance officials say, is that more victims than expected have been able to sue for compensation for "pain and suffering" in addition to receiving no-fault payments for medical bills and lost earnings.

The State Legislature enacted the no fault law in 1974 to provide a method for compensating victims for injuries without expensive litigation to prove negligence. The savings in legal expenses were supposed to be reflected in stable insurance rates.

However, the Legislature allowed victims to sue for pain and suffering if they had injuries calling for more than $500 in medical treatment. So many persons have been filing suits under that provision, state officials estimate, that the total number of pain and suffering cases has dropped by only about 50 percent; no-fault had been expected to cut the accident caseload by at least 80 percent, leaving only the most serious cases in the courts. The state officials believe that many victims, with the cooperation of doctors, have been deliberately incurring more medical expenses than necessary to qualify for a suit.

Because the decrease in suits was less than expected and because litigation costs, including the size of jury awards, have gone up, insurance premiums for bodily injury coverage have increased by about 65 percent since July, 1975, when increases became permissible under the law.

To make the no-fault system work as intended, State Insurance Superintendent Thomas Barnett has proposed legislation prohibiting lawsuits regardless of the amount of the claim except in cases of specified types of serious injury. The plan is opposed by an influential group, the state's trial lawyers.

Some but not all of the 23 other states with no-fault have also had a problem of excessive litigation, according to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, an organization of state officials.

Inequities Common In Jail Sentences

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

Criminal sentences handed out by New York State judges are the longest in the country, often up to 15 to 25 years, but in practice most felons in this state spend two or three years in prison and then are released on parole. "The sentence in this state, particularly in [New York City], is that prison sentences are not long enough," Edward R. Hammock, chairman of the State Board of Parole, said recently.

Nassau's G.O.P. A House Divided

An argument long simmering in the Nassau County Republican Party of Nassau County, L. I.—New York State's flag ship G.O.P. organization—is proving so destructive that the party seems in danger of losing control of the county government. Its power across the state is also in jeopardy.

The feud began when Joseph M. Margiotta, the Nassau Republican leader, sought to prevent Ralph G. Caso, the County Executive, from seeking re-election. Mr. Margiotta and other Republican leaders felt that Mr. Caso's actions had alienated a large part of the electorate; loss of the office, the politicians believed, would endanger patronage and party contributions, traditionally in the hands of the Executive.

In recent months Mr. Caso has been criticized for insisting on increasing the sales tax by 1 percent (which he later said was not needed), opposing an arbitrator's recommendation of salary increases for the police, and freezing wages for county employees.

When told he would be denied the party's nomination at the convention next year, Mr. Caso said he would wage a primary campaign. Since then, two other candidates have entered the race, State Senator John R. Dunne and Francis T. Purcell, Presiding Supervisor of the Town of Hempstead. Mr.

Purcell has Mr. Margiotta's support. If Mr. Margiotta's candidate the organization could be weakened and the county ousted. Such developments almost certainly harm the party's outsized influence in Legislature.

The county organization controls largest and most cohesive block Legislature, a bloc that has ob state school aid for the county seen to it that other programs s by Nassau residents—such as im ments for the Long Island Railr were approved. It has also succes fought programs antithetical to in the county, such as increas the commuter tax.

Court Rules On Claims By Women

In two new decisions involving women's rights, the United States Supreme Court has ruled against the claims of women, as it did a week ago in a more important case involving compensation pay during illness connected with pregnancy.

In one of the new cases, the Court held unanimously last week that the Social Security law excluding divorced women from a "wife's benefits" program was constitutional, overruling a Federal District Court in Illinois that had held that the exclusion of divorced wives violated the due-process clause of the Fifth Amendment. The Supreme Court ruled that Congress had the power to make a reasonable distinction between the economic circumstances of married and divorced women.

The Court's opinion, by Justice Potter Stewart, said Congress could reasonably assume that "divorced husbands and wives depend less on each other for financial and other support than do couples who stay married."

In another action, the Court refused, by a 7-2 vote, to hear a challenge to a Kentucky requirement that a married woman use her husband's name when applying for a driver's license.

The state had maintained that the common law of Kentucky gives wives their husbands' names, that the majority of women prefer to take their husbands' names, and that it was "necessary for the benefit of succeeding generations" for wives to do so. The state also said that the classification was based on marital status, not sex, and hence was nondiscriminatory.

A lower court had held that the classification was not discriminatory, and in refusing to hear the case, the Supreme Court let the lower court's decision stand. Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall dissented, saying they would have heard arguments on the case.

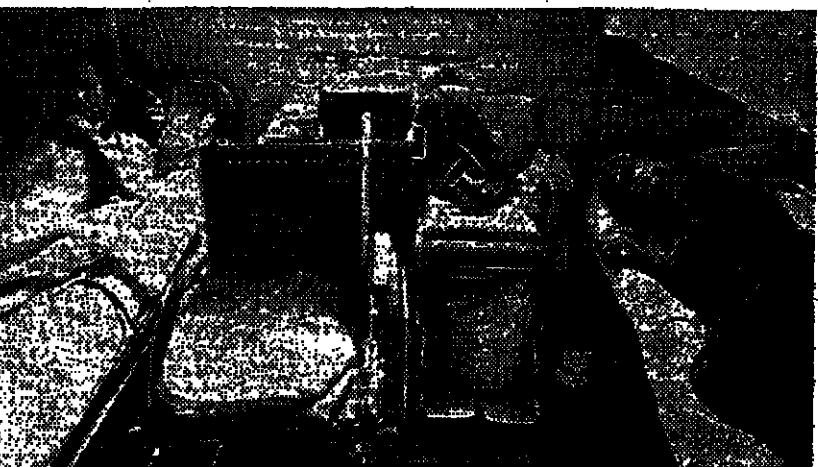

Poor Health Care in Jails

A month after the United States Supreme Court ruled that under some circumstances poor medical care in prison can constitute cruel and unusual punishment, the American Medical Association has found that of 30 jails surveyed only 37 percent had medical clinics and only 13 percent gave admission physical examinations. The A.M.A. also found "a startling incidence of untreated illnesses among the nation's jail population."

Working under a contract with the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration in the Department of Justice, A.M.A. doctors examined 1,000 jail inmates. They found that 15 percent of inmates in an Indiana jail had positive tuberculosis skin tests, 27 percent in a Wisconsin jail had abnormal readings for hepatitis, and 66 percent in a Georgia jail had abnormal urinalysis tests, indicating the possibility of diabetes or other ailments.

Among the general population, just .0159 percent are ill with tuberculosis, .0281 percent have hepatitis and 5 percent have diabetes. Doctors believe that because of his low socio-economic status, the average criminal is less healthy than other people. One study showed that 95 percent of inmates enter prison needing medical care.

Hospital patients in an Alabama prison.

Alleged Health Officials

found the risk of death or serious complications as much as two and a half times as great at one hospital as at another. Patients fared best at hospitals that employed a high proportion of registered nurses, spent large sums per patient, and were discriminating about giving doctors staff privileges. Despite statistical correlations, no cause-and-effect relationships were pinpointed.

Sweden Paying New Fathers

Sweden, long a social welfare bellwether, is experimenting with a system of paid paternity leaves that has put that country still further ahead of other nations.

Under the Swedish plan, a father may stay at home with his newborn child for up to seven months while collecting 95 percent of his salary. If the mother also works, the parents may split the seven-month period between them in any way they please.

Currently, only 7 percent of Swedish fathers take advantage of the program. Officials theorize that some men fear damage to their careers, while others, still "unliberated," believe it is up to mothers to stay home with the child. However, the number of participants has more than quadrupled since 1974 and is expected to continue increasing.

Participating fathers are enthusiastic. "I don't know why it took so long to come," one father said. "It is such an obvious two-way exchange. Children should get to know their fathers. And I have learned so much from them, not just from this [newborn] one, but from my 3-year-old whom I now see in the morning and after school, really for the first time. He asks things I never thought of."

The situation in Sweden is in contrast with that of the United States where working women have yet to get a clear right to stay home with infants for several months, and a paid paternity leave is almost unheard of. Even unpaid leave for fathers is a rarity, although the Federal Employment Opportunity Commission has ruled in a New York case employers must grant men workers same child-care leave they women.

Scientific Squeeze

Ice on the move has unexpected closed in and immobilized the with which American scientists trying to penetrate Ross Ice Shelf Antarctica. The mishap delays efforts at exploring the sunless sea beneath the shelf and punctures the world view of sophisticated scientists as all but immune to serious acts of computation.

"We blew it," B. Lyle Hansen, University of Nebraska drilling expert said. Mr. Hansen took the blame for miscalculating the rate at which the ice moved in the drilling hole and locked in the drilling equipment.

Two dozen scientists from many nations had been waiting at an Antarctic base for the drill to reach the Now they must go home without finding out what kind of life may exist under the ice. A new attempt at exploration will be made next year. Meanwhile, experts hope to salvage some of their equipment by dynamiting out of the ice.

The OPEC Price Rise...

The split decision of the OPEC nations on next year's oil price increase presents the world with a hope and a certainty. The hope is that Saudi Arabia's five percent price rise and promise of greatly enlarged production will force 11 other OPEC members to rescind part of their two-stage 15 percent price increase. The certainty is that the world oil price will go up significantly January 1.

The Eleven now produce about two-thirds of the world's oil imports, while Saudi Arabia and its allies, the United Arab Emirates, export about one-third. Unless OPEC breaks up completely, which is unlikely, the average price increase for the year would probably be between 9 and 10 percent.

That does not seem enormous. But it would add more than $10 billion to the $40 billion trade deficit the world already is running with the OPEC nations. And it comes on top of a five-fold oil price increase since 1973 that has helped thrust most of the world into an almost unmanageable combination of inflation, recession and unemployment—from which it now will be even more difficult to emerge.

Saudi Arabia could alter this equation by going quickly from its present output of 8.5 million barrels a day to its current capacity of 11.8 million. Over time, the Saudis could more than double their production, demolish OPEC and set the world price themselves. But Oil Minister Yamani of Saudi Arabia has warned against this illusion. An astute former American Ambassador there, James Akins, is predicting an emergency OPEC meeting early in 1977 and agreement on a compromise single price.

The Saudi role in resisting large oil price increases is not new. Saudi Arabia is unable to spend its present oil income. But for the same reason, it prefers to keep its oil in the ground for the future, rather than to exhaust it earlier by high production. It is concerned about the Soviet Union and Arab radicalism and wants good relations with the United States. But the price for its moderation has been American sale of billions of dollars of sophisticated arms and, again now as during the 1973 oil embargo, demands for American pressure on Israel for the kind of Mideast settlement the Arabs seek.

As a result, overoptimism about the OPEC split is hardly warranted. As Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb has warned, satisfaction over the OPEC fissure must not be permitted to obscure the fact that oil prices are being raised.

... at Home ...

There is only one way to persuade the OPEC nations that the world is serious about oil prices and the insecurity of its chief energy supply. That is for the advanced nations to take vigorous measures to conserve energy and develop new energy sources that reduce dependence on imported oil.

That hasn't happened yet, despite the repeated drama of OPEC price rises and the even greater drama of the 1973-74 oil embargo. Neither has prodded the industrial nations into an adequate energy policy. And the United States, the most profligate consumer, is the most serious offender.

Three years after the oil embargo, oil still provides half of the total primary energy requirements of the industrial nations. Over two-thirds of the oil requirement is still met by imports. The United States alone consumes over 40 percent of the total oil used by these countries. And U.S. oil consumption is now supplied 41 percent by imports, as against 34 percent in 1973.

That dependence can be reduced over time. Gasoline is sold in the United States at 60 cents a gallon, far below the world price and one-half to one-third the price charged in the other industrial countries. An adequate conservation policy demands, as a first step, a heavy gasoline tax with rebates to lower income groups and the remainder of the proceeds invested in development of alternate energy supplies, mass-transit systems and strategic storage.

American coal, developed under strict strip-mine controls, can help close the energy gap for West Europe and Japan as well, until nuclear fusion, synthetic fuels, shale, solar, geothermal and other new sources of energy can replace oil. There is no time to lose, considering the long lead time required to bring in new energy sources.

Greater danger than OPEC extortion lies ahead. Although economic growth will keep energy demand rising, world oil production is expected to peak out after 1985, then decline, perhaps in the 1990s. What demand could do to the oil price at that point, even without OPEC, is frightening to contemplate.

President-elect Carter, to fulfill his campaign promises in this area, evidently will seek to consolidate most of Washington's multiple energy agencies into a single, cabinet-level Department of Energy. In anticipation of Congressional action, an energy czar could well be appointed immediately to coordinate the existing agencies on behalf of the President and to impose a vigorous, imaginative and coherent policy on them. Conservation of energy and massive investment in alternate sources will require sacrifices that only inspired Presidential leadership can bring the nation to accept.

... and Abroad

Even without the increase in the oil price, a great many oil-importing countries were already on the worry list with heavy outstanding debts and rising deficits in their balance of payments. The oil-importing developing countries of the Third World now have foreign debts in excess of $160 billion to both public and private institutions. Some industrial nations, including Britain and Italy, also face difficulties in servicing and renewing their large external debts.

Many nations have the evil choice of accepting further currency depreciation, which would exacerbate their domestic inflations, or clamping down on imports. Such protectionism could ricochet through the world economy and create a severe slump in world trade. The OPEC oil price increase can only worsen this hazardous world economic and monetary situation.

It is thus more urgent than ever for the United States to do three fundamental things: expand its own economy and urge West Germany and Japan to do the same, in order to increase the markets for the products of the severely strained developing and other industrial countries; increase the resources available to aid nations in trouble; and provide official help to other countries in rescheduling their debt payments, whether to private or public institutions, in order to avoid defaults that could shake the world monetary system and some national economies.

referendum, two things seem clear. King and Prime Minister have set Spain firmly on the democratic road and the Spanish people overwhelmingly approve of their actions.

The Missing in Action

Representative G. V. Montgomery has delivered the painful but inescapable message that all the remaining Americans still listed as missing in Vietnam must be considered dead. The Pentagon carried the names of 728 men as missing and 33 as prisoners. But the Mississippi Democrat who headed the House of Representatives' Select Committee on Missing Persons in Southeast Asia put it simply: "The sad conclusion is that there is no evidence that any of these missing Americans are still alive."

For the families of the men, this is the final moment in a long and bitter tragedy of hoping against hope. Perhaps the only fate worse than that of the families whose men were killed in that cruel war is the long uncertainty suffered by those whose sons, husbands and fathers were reported missing.

It never seemed likely that all the casualties of such brutal and chaotic jungle warfare could be identified. While the United States was duty-bound to extract every obtainable scrap of information about the missing men, this process has long carried unfortunate overtones of political as well as humanitarian pressures. The issue of the missing Americans has clearly been used to hamper efforts to establish more normal relations with Vietnam.

Mr. Montgomery rightly insists that the committee's conclusion in no way diminishes the United States Government's responsibility to demand the fullest possible accounting for what happened to any of the men, including the circumstances of their deaths. There is little reason, however, to believe that the chances of obtaining such information are enhanced by American vetoes of Vietnam's application for U.N. membership or by Washington's refusal to establish diplomatic relations.

Such policies seem to us wrong on many grounds, but they are indefensible when they involve buying up hopes of bringing the dead back to life. The House committee's report should put an end to such cruel misuse of family bonds and human love.

Spain for Democracy

It was a foregone conclusion that Spanish voters would endorse overwhelmingly the Government's plan to hold free elections for a new democratic Parliament next spring. There was, nonetheless, something exhilarating about the 75 percent turnout in Wednesday's referendum and the 94 percent approval for the program advanced by King Juan Carlos and Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez for dismantling the authoritarian system of Francisco Franco.

Opponents of the program and advocates of abstention were allowed to campaign openly with only minor police harassment, and were even given access to television and radio—unthinkable in the Franco era—to present their case against the Government. The only serious act of violence was the kidnapping, evidently by left extremists, of the ultra-conservative President of the advisory Council of State. But abstention rates were high enough in two of the Basque provinces to remind the Government of unresolved problems.

For the country as a whole, the voters emphatically rejected the advice to oppose or abstain, pressed on them from both left and right, and the result constituted a sharp rebuff for the late Generalissimo's political heirs, who had campaigned on the slogan, "Franco would have voted no." The referendum thus provided another indication of the rapid disintegration of Spain's extreme right, reflected dramatically last month when the hold-over Francoist Cortes (Parliament) voted itself out of existence and approved democratic elections.

Under the Francoist Constitution, the referendum was necessary in order to ratify that action of the Cortes. Prime Minister Suárez is now expected to move rapidly to set an election date sometime before next June and to try to bring those democratic forces that boycotted the referendum into the developing political process—perhaps even into his transition Government. If they reject his overtures, these democrats may damage their cause severely.

After the self-destruction of the Cortes, convincing pledges of political aloofness by military leaders loyal to the King, and the massive turnout at Wednesday's

If the U.S. Centralizes Oil Purchases

To the Editor:

Of the many proposals for "solving" the energy problem none seems more incredibly naive than Messrs. Stone and McNamara's not-new plan to set up a Government agency to purchase all U.S.-imported oil. OPEC would surely respond by creating a parallel agency through which all bids to the U.S. would be harmonized as to price and volume. This would not only insure that the U.S. would pay the highest possible uniform price for oil but do more to strengthen the cartel than any event short of war.

Today oil-producing countries have some opportunity to increase output by concessions made in hundreds of highly complex and competitive negotiations that take place between companies and producers. Replacement of this with bids that then would become highly visible to all OPEC members would destroy this competition and diminish benefits now obtained from an extraordinary present technology for supplying oil to U.S. customers most efficiently from other world destinations. And the cost of oil would be increased further to support a vast new bureaucratic organization that inevitably would take more and more control over the industry's business.

Those of us who have participated and know something about the way in which international oil prices are set are appalled by the lack of knowledge evidenced by these authors and some others of the academic community as to how real world oil activities are carried out. They perpetuate a myth of oil company cartels and intrigue that simply is not true.

There is not and never has been a "cozy" relationship between companies and oil-producing countries. Rather, it is doubtful that negotiations anywhere in the world of business have been tougher than the fight by the oil companies over buying prices from producing countries. In retrospect, it was perhaps unrealistically tough negotiations by companies over just a few cents per barrel that led to formation of OPEC in the first place. Despite OPEC, this tough process of negotiation, together with striking improvements in efficiency, brought lower and lower real-basis oil prices to consumers for decades prior to the time a war changed OPEC from an economic to a potent political force. Our petroleum industry is now more efficient than ever—possibly our greatest economic asset. This asset should be valued and understood, not destroyed.

To the Editor:

The economics of the municipal bond market and goals of New York City state and local financings a times in conflict, as noted Daniel Saks in his Dec. 5 letter. The writer suggests away with this market and a better deal for state and rowings at a Federal Finance which would raise funds taxable bonds.

He neglects some important considerations.

For instance, what is the rate to be paid by the municipality? Should it match the rate paid by the Federal Government? It would pay a subsidized rate? At the present exempt rates are substantial taxable rates, not just quality but frequently irreparable. This is one reason if Government itself sells bonds and notes to finance housing projects where a rate can help keep rents low.

Professor Saks assumes deal at the Federal bank for managed municipalities. It is those municipalities which the best access to the municipal bond market is doing. It is the communities who have become major various urban ills (or an optimism that tomorrow better) who have had difficulty money in the tax-exempt market to whom Saks would deny the Federal bank until the houses in order, exactly bond market is doing.

The formidable difficulties New York City in its financial problems caused by in the market for municipal come investments. The city stem from widely shared its financial future. Until can be altered by the prop turning of the city's fiscal a ous temporizing measures, imaginatively conceived Assistance Corporation or financing vehicle will need needed to assure New York Smothering the market and local bonds under a blanket is no answer.

'The Last Battle'

To the Editor:

Good progress has been elimination of discriminatory of sex, race and religion same can be said of age discrimination. If anything, age is more prevalent than the young, the middle-aged and all are affected.

In regard to the young, lords will not permit children in their apartments. Just furor that would be created of children, landlords this blacks, Puerto Ricans or groups. Many restaurant do not look kindly at service because they are regarded grubby, demanding pests. There are adults in these adults are given the best doubt.

Here is how the middle is discriminated against: that group, because of its the mystical age of 62 or reductions in taxes, obtaining at banks, get discount establishments, ride cheap modes of transportation other money-saving measures cause an extra working, productive, heavily taxed segment of middle-aged group—who these differences in cost.

When a man or woman 65, it does not follow she is physically or mentally Many have just reached of their years. And they more experienced than Why then job discrimination? Men and women the opportunity to do the they want and which it to do, regardless of age counterbalancing speed.

Age discrimination is for equality to be fought about as important to what is to overcome sex, race discrimination. FAVOR

The General's 'Amnesty'

To the Editor:

General Westmoreland's assault on a proposal for the pardon of Vietnam-era draft evaders [Op-Ed Dec. 12] is a pitiable spectacle. He apparently views himself as speaking for the indignant veterans who, when drafted, decided against evasion and placed themselves at the risk of war. Amnesty or pardon for those who avoided the risk, according to the general, is an affront to the millions who served under his command.

Serious questions can be raised about the ability of the general to speak with authority on behalf of veterans who served as draftees during the war era, since there was such a profound discontinuity between his experience and theirs.

Although the general may be in a campaign to justify a war of which he was one of the primary architects, and consequently justify his own role in that war, his position on amnesty should be tempered by the fact that a certain amnesty has settled over him in connection with his conduct during the war as the leader of American forces. At the least, it seems inconsistent of him to deny amnesty to others when he has been the beneficiary of an amnesty himself.

Tax-Cut Alternative

To the Editor:

A more productive and less inflationary way than a tax cut to spur the economy would be the institution of a 1 percent subsidy for a limited period on all new homes which sell for less than $50,000. Not only would there be a tremendous surge in home building, but a consequent uplift in the sale of garden supplies, furniture, tools, dishware and other home-related items would ensue.

The unemployment rate would be quickly cut, while the lowered cost of home upkeep would inhibit the next wage-price spiral.

Conserving Energy

To the Editor:

One non-controversial way to stretch our energy resources would be by legislating the maximum speed indication on the speedometer of all new cars to 66 m.p.h. The 11 m.p.h. margin over the existing national speed limit would permit occasional spurts for safe passing and lane changing, while the thought of an expensive repair bill would dissuade drivers from speeding much in excess of the legal limit. A further deterrent would be a provision in the proposed law penalizing motorists who drive a car without a functioning speedometer.

Joblessness: Share-the-Work Remedy

To the Editor:

President-elect Jimmy Carter has promised that by Inauguration Day he will have a comprehensive program to reduce unemployment by 1½ percent in 1977. Unemployment is a major challenge for the new Administration. Reducing the jobless rate from 7.9 percent to 6.4 percent would mean creating approximately 1½ million jobs—no small feat for any President.

But what about the 6½ million still unemployed? Must we wait until 1980 and a stronger growth rate in the economy before we can do anything to help them?

As Pat Gorman of the meat cutters union points out, "There was a time when the policy of the trade union movement was to share the work when hard times came knocking at the door." But we don't hear much talk about "work-sharing" today. Some unions, like those in the needle trades, have historically used this technique to minimize layoffs; but others argue that shortened work weeks will only reduce the pressure to achieve real full employment, leaving the workers to bear the full burden of helping the unemployed.

A temporary and creative answer to the problem—and one that AFL-CIO President George Meany and National Urban League Director Vernon Jordan support—was suggested by Lillian Poses of New York State's Task Force on Unemployment: Use unemployment insurance to supplement voluntary work-sharing. If a company with 500 full-time workers, putting in 20,000 work-hours in a normal 40-hour week, has to cut down to 16,000 work-hours, this can be accomplished by laying off 100 workers or by having all 500 employees work only 32 hours a week, and receive unemployment insurance for the fifth day. Taking into account the reduction in taxes (there is no income tax on the unemployment insurance), childcare and lunch costs, workers would get between 90 and 95 percent of their regular weekly wage this way, keep their health insurance and other fringe benefits, even go on paying union dues.

S. Martin Nemirov, a U.S. Labor Department expert, believes all that's needed to make this work is for the Federal Government to "impose on the regular Federal-state unemployment insurance system a one-day wage replacement standard of the Poses type."

It's only a stopgap, temporary program—not a full solution. But while waiting for full employment to be achieved, Congress and the new President ought to give serious thought to this way of letting more Americans share in the good life that all Americans cherish.

A Money Machine Named Nuveen

By JOHN E. ALLAN

In this era of retrenchment in Wall Street, a thriving investment house is exceptional, and one that earns a steady 25 percent or more on its capital is as scarce as a stockbroker without a buy recommendation.

Such a firm is John Nuveen & Company, which is even more unusual because it is a single-line firm that virtually submerged in a sea of red ink in 1969 and now has rebounded to become one of the most profitable members of the American securities industry.

Nuveen is a Chicago-oriented bond house, with substantial operations in Wall Street. Its profitability, averaging more than 25 percent on invested capital for the last five years, ranks it with such other money-making machines as Salomon Brothers, Morgan Stanley & Company and Goldman Sachs & Company, although in absolute dollars Nuveen is smaller.

Nuveen is in strong condition today, but only seven years ago the firm was on the edge of bankruptcy—forced to quit the New York Stock Exchange as losses ate up its $14 million in capital after a disastrous effort to become a full-line, actively trading securities house.

The talk was that it was going to become a Presbyterian Seaborn Brothers, a former Nuveen officer remarked, recently as he recalled the great expectations of the 1960's. The firm, then led by Frank C. Carr as chairman, expanded rapidly beyond municipal bonds—its fundamental business since 1898—into corporate bonds, stock brokerage, securities research and other fields in a diversification effort that was not unusual in Wall Street at that time.

Nuveen's glorious expansion in the go-go years, its near-collapse in 1969—a year of unremitting declines in both the stock and bond markets—and then its radical surgery and phoenix-like return to profitability are the threads of one of Wall Street's more extraordinary recent success stories.

For more than 60 years, John Nuveen & Company stuck to the business it knew best—helping states and cities and other local governments borrow money for schools and streets and such by selling municipal bonds to investors. It was founded by John Nuveen 5th, a Danish-born Netherlander who ran the firm for 50 years. It helped Arizona and Oklahoma raise money when they were still territories; it helped finance several public power systems and it had a strong knowledge of local government finances in the Midwest.

John Nuveen 5th died in 1948, and his son, John Nuveen 6th, remained a director until his death in 1968. His son, John Nuveen 7th, and his grandson, John Nuveen 8th, never worked with the securities firm.

In 1968 the United States economy went through a nightmarish period of sky-high interest rates—the highest since 1920. The episode—widely known as the "credit crunch"—made some leading single-line, tax-exempt bond firms run for shelter. W. H. Morison & Company became a division of the American Express Company. B. J. Van Ingen & Company joined Kidder, Peabody & Company. Phelps, Penn & Company talked of merging with Blair & Company but managed, with tight cost controls, to stay independent until 1972, when it was acquired by Reynolds Securities.

Nuveen, too, wanted diversification, but it had grander ideas than other municipal bond firms. At the time of the credit crunch, the firm was the largest shareholder in the United States Banknote Corporation, and it decided to sell its 19 percent interest and use the money to buy other securities firms.

In September 1967, Nuveen acquired Arthur Wiesenberger & Company, a New York Stock Exchange member firm known for its mutual fund directories. According to ex-Wiesenberger partners, Nuveen agreed to pay between $2 million and $3 million for their brokerage firm, with payments to be stretched out over a 10-year period.

While Nuveen executive Frank Carr, gushed over the acquisition as "just such a natural," others were less sanguine. "Wiesenberger made millions on giveups and then it sold out when giveups were about to be interred," commented one source who later helped with the disposition of the various parts of Nuveen.

Giveups, which the Securities and Exchange Commission began to question in the mid-1960's and which were finally outlawed by the New York Stock Exchange in December 1968, were an outgrowth of Wall Street's practice of splitting commissions. An institutional investor could direct a brokerage house executing its order to give up part of the commission to another firm in return for such services as research or selling mutual fund shares.

The Wiesenberger acquisition agreement had one hitch, however. If Nuveen's finances deteriorated to a designated trigger point, Wiesenberger could call for the unpaid balance. Initially, no one worried about this provision.

At the end of its fiscal year late in 1968, Nuveen paid large bonuses. It had joined the Big Board and the American Stock Exchange, had become a corporate bond underwriter, had moved into Treasury bonds, had hired a highly-paid staff of stock analysts and had moved its headquarters into expensively decorated offices in Chicago and New York.

"Everything was first class," recalled a former Nuveen executive. "We all flew first class. The firm had an apartment uptown. It had great plans."

To finance a larger business, Nuveen raised capital by selling stock to employees—often with 100 percent financing—when the book value was higher than $40 a share. It was, unfortunately, a bad time to expand into the stock brokerage business, for stock prices peaked in January 1969, and then sank lower and lower all year long. To make matters worse, bond prices plummeted, too. Suddenly Nuveen was in trouble, although the trouble didn't surface until later.

As bond prices fell, Nuveen took on larger inventories of bonds on the mistaken theory that prices would soon rally. According to former traders who lived through the losses, Nuveen evaluated its holdings only once a month then and had no effective internal controls on its expenses.

Some time in mid-1969, it suddenly discovered that it had run through its capital. The discovery was so unexpected that one bond salesman was given a raise in the morning and was dismissed the same afternoon, according to one account.

The losses prompted Arthur Wiesenberger to act, and he asked for his money. To pay him, Nuveen got an infusion of capital from the Paul Revere Insurance Company—which turned out to be a mistake because the New York Stock Exchange then did not permit institutional ownership of member firms. Nuveen left the Big Board on July 31, 1969, and its prestige suffered.

The effort to invade the stock brokerage business was catastrophic. Seventy Nuveen employees were laid off, as radical surgery began. On Sept. 15, 1969, Investors Diversified Services, the big Minneapolis mutual fund management company, stepped in and purchased Nuveen for $3.2 million, the market value of its securities inventory—which meant that Nuveen was considered worthless as a business. I.D.S. soon sold off the Wiesenberger unit of the business to the NN Corporation, an insurance holding company, and concentrated on Nuveen's traditional bond business, which included the closed-end tax-exempt bond funds that the firm had pioneered in 1961.

Only Frank Wendt, now chairman, remained among the top officers as president. To help run the firm, I.D.S. reached down into the executive ranks and promoted Richard J. Franke, a determined, persistent, analytical, steady executive vice president who was nicknamed "Bonds" Franke back when he was a member of the Class of 1957 at the Harvard Business School.

"We introduced some new disciplines," Mr. Franke explained as he recalled reshaping the firm and bringing it back to profitability in 1970. The firm was divided into profit centers, each producing a daily profit or loss. We can modulate our investment in the market to reflect changes," he explained. "This is a very strict discipline."

Nuveen also established five-year goals, an innovation that Mr. Franke viewed as "just bringing sound management principles to investment banking." The first five-year plan resulted in paring back to concentrate on bond business; the only part of the pension that was kept was the Government and Federal agency securities business.

The first five years also produced a result that did not come according to plan—another change in ownership. I.D.S. owned Nuveen from September 1969 until March 1974, and it pumped in $5.5 million in capital in addition to its $3.2 million purchase price. I.D. took out $6 million in dividends as sold Nuveen to the St. Paul Companies, an insurance holding company from Minneapolis for $9.3 million.

The sale came in 1974, when interest rates surpassed even those of the 1960's and reached their highest level at least since the Civil War. I.D. directors, in a policy decision, decided to sell any aspects of the business that required large amounts of borrowings. That meant getting rid of Nuveen, the bond business is built on carrying large inventories of bonds financed with borrowed funds.

"There was no pessimism," Nuveen's future involved in decision to sell," said Fred M. Kipman of I.D.S.

Since coming under the wing of St. Paul Companies, Nuveen has done extremely well. The performance, he said, has been aided by declining interest rates and rising bond prices much of the time since the peak level of August, September, and October 1974.

In that year Nuveen made a profit of $1.4 million. The next year, earnings jumped to $6.6 million. The year the firm reported $7.1 million after-tax earnings for the first 10 months. Its capital is now $23 million.

Last year, Nuveen reported a handsome 43 percent return on investment, according to insiders, and, with a strong performance of the municipal bond market recently, the firm is equal that rate again. To achieve the results during the turbulent bond markets of the 1970's and during a change of ownership was "a first-rate management job against a tough backdrop," according to Richard Jenrette, managing partner of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, and Mr. Franke's roommate at Harvard.

Helping to insure its profits are the Nuveen Tax-Exempt Bond Funds, which are fixed portfolios of municipal bonds that the firm has been selling to investors for 15 years. This is Nuveen's bread and butter business. The World, at the top of the World Trade Center, to celebrate passing $1 billion in sales of these funds.

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 permitted the sale of open-end managed tax-exempt bond mutual funds, and the will give the closed-end bond funds like those pioneered by Nuveen a stiff run for the investor's dollar. Nuveen itself is now offering a managed fund, but it remains to be seen how well their tax-exempt mutual funds perform as how deeply they cut into the closed-end bond fund business.

It took Nuveen 12 years to sell its first billion dollars of its funds—its only three years to sell the second billion. Now, however, the field is getting more crowded. "Municipal bond research is another cornerstone of the rednecked firm, and Nuveen claims that no other house has such broad scope in the field. In an era when near-deadly faults of municipalities are almost frequent, good research has suddenly become essential.

Like any good Harvard Business School graduate, Rich Franke has long range goals, and his are to run "the best investment banking firm in the municipal and Government securities business." By maintaining strict management controls and by careful planning, he believes new troubles can be avoided in the prospects for the future are favorable.

"Debt securities are an essential part of the American economic scene," Mr. Franke reasons. "By employing good execution, strict management control, forward planning, a well-balanced team of professionals and innovative services, we have taken the necessary steps to ensure that Nuveen will be successful in the future," he says.

"The evidence is so certain: 'The long term jury is still out on whether a non-diversified house can still make it,'" warns Richard Jenrette.

Business Missed a Bet in the Elections

Political committees will become more active in future Presidential campaigns. Choosing one horse early in a multi-candidate race is likely to run against the conservative grain of such groups. More probable would be a group of across-the-board contributions to several potential nominees.

In the general election, the only private contributions that could be made to the Carter-Mondale or Ford-Dole tickets had to be passed through the Democratic and Republican National Committees, which were limited to $3.2 million each in support of their candidate.

The two national committees, unused to fund-raising on the scale attempted in 1976, made relatively little use of political action committee donations. During the fall campaign, the Republicans raised about $300,000 from such sources and the Democrats only about $30,000.

During the fall, corporations could have engaged in direct political campaigning for one or the other of the Presidential candidates among their stockholders and executives, but very few did. With two weeks of the campaign to go, exactly one corporation, Dresser Industries of Dallas had reported spending $5,245 on such a communications program.

The President Ford Committee conducted a late effort to promote more of such support, but only a half-dozen or so corporations sent out letters endorsing the Republican ticket. Only those that spent more than $2,000 on the mailing are required to report to the election commission.

At the same time, two weeks before the election, organized labor had reported spending $450,000 to communicate with union members on behalf of the Carter-Mondale ticket, and the final figure, reflecting telephone bank operations all over the country, will certainly run into the millions.

Political action committees were much more active in 1976 in backing selected Senate and House candidates. Although full figures have not yet been compiled for the more than 450 races, Common Cause, the public interest lobby, has projected a total investment of $20 million covering both primaries and the general election.

Such spending is considered more politically significant since a given union or corporate committee can legally give $10,000 to a House candidate—$5,000 in the primary and $5,000 in the general election—and this represents a substantial share of an average campaign budget for such a candidate.

As an illustration, the G-P Employee Fund, the political action committee of the Georgia-Pacific Corporation, had donated a total of $35,570 to Presidential, Senate and House candidates during 1976 as of two weeks after the election.

The committee gave $4,000 to President Ford, $1,000 to Senator Henry M. Jackson, while he was seeking the Democratic nomination and $1,000 later to Mr. Carter. A total of $14,950 in amounts ranging from $100 to $4,000 was distributed among Senate candidates—13 Republicans, 5 Democrats and one independent.

In addition to five primary contributions, the Georgia-Pacific committee gave $33,800 to 82 House candidates, of which 56 were Republicans and 26 were Democrats, most of the latter consisting of incumbents seeking re-election. The contributions ranged from $100 to Brock Adams of Washington, the new Secretary-designate of Transportation, to $2,500 for John Nance Garner, a Republican who lost a very close race in Washington's Second Congressional District.

One new vehicle for introducing private funds into the campaign with little or no restriction by the election commission resulted from a decision of the Supreme Court striking down parts of the campaign law as unconstitutional.

The high court eliminated a proposed limit on "independent" spending, or political advertising undertaken on behalf of a candidate by one of his supporters that is voluntary and entirely uncoordinated with the regular campaign. The court said this was an exercise of free speech that could not be subjected to any dollar limits.

As a result, a number of wealthy businessmen around the country reported spending more than $600,000 on this kind of support for Ronald Reagan, although the Ford forces contended that much of this was not genuinely independent. Similar spending on behalf of the President totaled about $220,000.

As for the money spent by unions to communicate with their members, unrestricted but reportable for the first time this year, labor organizations had listed nearly $375,000 two weeks before the election, about $450,000 of it on behalf of the Carter-Mondale ticket. Nearly $20,000 was spent to communicate with union members with respect to the Ford-Dole ticket, all of it in opposition.

Struthers Wells and Secondary Oil Recovery

Struthers Wells pioneered the development of commercial sized steam generators for secondary oil recovery during the early 1960s. Domestic companies planning overseas installations can also secure the same Struthers Wells' engineering expertise and fabrication know-how that is available in the United States. In many of the major industrial countries of the world, the following equipment is available through the Paris engineering and sales office of Struthers Wells, or through our competent licensees:

- Feedwater heaters for commercial fossil fuel and nuclear power plants.
- Auxiliary heat exchangers for commercial power plants.
- Ammonia and urea plant Multivalt® reactors and high pressure heat exchangers.
- High pressure refinery and petrochemical heat exchangers.
- Secondary oil recovery steam generators.
- Phosphoric acid crystallizers.
- Fire tube and water tube process waste heat boilers.
- Incinerator waste heat boilers.
- Waste stream evaporators and crystallizers.
- Gas turbine waste heat boilers.
- Process furnaces.

If you are planning a new overseas or domestic facility or thinking of expanding an existing one, Struthers Wells' designs are probably available to you near your plant.

Paul Volcker Speaks Out on Oil Prices, Tax Cuts

among themselves, but which they cannot get rid of altogether.

"If the oil deficit was spread out evenly and fairly," Mr. Volcker says, "we could probably keep going for some time." But it isn't. "The deficits are becoming heavily concentrated on some countries," he goes on, "and often on those least able to bear them," a reference to the developing world and the weaker industrial nations like Britain, France and Italy.

For instance, the latest forecasts by the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development suggest that the developing nations will shoulder about half of the oil deficit next year, just as they are this year, with the richer countries taking up the rest of the burden.

Meanwhile, Britain is likely to pile up another $2 billion in debts next year on top of the $3 billion incurred in 1976, while France may add a $4 billion deficit to the $5.5 billion deficit expected this year. Germany, however, could see its surplus swell from $4.5 billion to $6.5 billion, although it has no oil of its own.

So far, as Mr. Volcker points out, debtor nations have been able to raise the funds they need by borrowing from banks and in the private capital markets. But while "private intermediation worked well to start with," he says, "we can't persist in this pattern. Unsustainable tensions are building up."

Simply put, Mr. Volcker's point is this: at the present the oil exporters are putting their surplus funds into private banks and capital markets that must then take the risk of lending them on to countries in deep balance-of-payments deficit—in large part because of the oil price increase.

At first these intermediaries were prepared to do this. But the time is approaching when it may no longer be a prudent risk. Mr. Volcker says he had expected to see a slowdown in private lending to deficit countries this year, although it has not occurred. He now thinks that private lenders will grow "much more selective" in the year ahead.

But if oil importers cannot finance their deficits, they will be forced to adopt such disruptive measures as import controls, which will only pass along their share of the oil deficit to someone else. "Changing the deck chairs on the Titanic" is the graphic phrase used to describe this process by the staff of the National Security Council in Washington.

So Mr. Volcker suggests that some form of "internationally supervised credit" might be necessary to tide the world over until the oil exporters have learned to spend their funds and the importers have developed new alternative energy supplies of their own.

The most ambitious such scheme was Mr. Kissinger's financial safety net, under which the industrialized countries of the world were to stand ready to bail out any of their number denied access to the private credit markets.

The proposal died a lingering death in Congress last year, but Mr. Volcker says that "personally I would feel a lot more comfortable" if it were revived by the incoming Administration. He adds that the same job could be done through a big expansion of the lending facilities of the International Monetary Fund, which are due to be reviewed next year.

Any such new credit schemes, he adds, should have appropriate strings attached—"strict conditionality" is the technical phrase—because the international community cannot be expected to finance spendthrift domestic policies and the debtors must be encouraged, gradually, to balance their books.

Reducing international financial imbalances is always easier when the world economy is growing and trade is on an upswing than in a static environment. And Mr. Volcker suggests this is one additional reason why the incoming Carter Administration should consider a more stimulatory economic policy at home.

"It's important for the health of the world that a handful of the stronger countries have a reasonable expansion," he says, "though this does not tell you how to do it without creating more inflation."

But so far as the United States is concerned, Mr. Volcker's views are reasonably clear-cut. He says outright that "the economy is not performing as satisfactorily as one would like."

The concern about a too-rapid recovery expressed at the Western economic summit in Puerto Rico last summer seems "to be diminishing, to say the least."

His preference is for an income tax reduction in view of the American economy's "present anatomy"—relatively slow growth in personal incomes and weak capital investment.

There is speculation that Mr. Volcker will replace Arthur F. Burns, chairman of Federal Reserve Board when the latter's term ends in two years.

As a member of the Federal Reserve's Open Market Committee, which tries to control the growth of the nation's money supply, Mr. Volcker is reluctant to comment publicly about monetary policy, partly because his comments could have an impact on the financial markets.

But he seems to side with the committee chairman, Dr. Burns, in believing that a faster rate of monetary expansion would be an unhealthy way to stimulate economic activity. Mr. Volcker insists that he is not a true "monetarist" in the sense of believing that control of the money supply is the alpha and omega of economic policy.

But he concedes grudgingly that there may be "more than a grain of truth" in the monetarists' contention that pumping new money into the economy will only pump up inflation. In other respects, Mr. Volcker's relations with the strong-willed Dr. Burns provoke innumerable, fascinating questions—all of which he politely declines to answer.

To some observers, it is ironic that a man who was once a power in his own right in the Treasury should now find himself a subordinate of Dr. Burns. It is also true that the New York Fed traditionally has been an independent line from the Federal Reserve Board in Washington and that relations have sometimes been strained in the past.

Today Mr. Volcker speaks tactfully of putting the differences of the past behind him and cooperating closely with Dr. Burns and Washington. But it is hard to believe that he would not speak his mind, particularly on international affairs, where his experience is strongest and Dr. Burns may be at a comparative disadvantage.

The more buoyant domestic economy that Mr. Volcker hopes to see next year would help the banking industry, which in part has been forced to step up its lending to deficit-ridden foreign countries by the weakness of loan demand at home. However, Mr. Volcker believes that the regulatory authorities need to keep a much closer eye on the banks in the future, even though they seem to have weathered the worst of the storm. "Banking regulation is a sleepy business," he says, "it takes a shock like the 1930's to wake people up."

The bankruptcies and sour loans of the last few years have played the same role as the Great Depression, in his eyes, and Mr. Volcker wants to see the New York Fed "out in front" in the bank supervisory effort. He points with pride to the leading role played by his bank in developing a new "early warning system" that the Federal Reserve system is building in an effort to identify troubled banks in the future before their troubles get serious.

Yet the president of the New York Fed also wants to be loved—as well as feared—by the private bankers. He already describes himself as more of an "activist" than his predecessor, Mr. Hayes, with a heavier tax speaking. Mr. Volcker also as a link between New York community and the Fed men in Washington.

While he has no wish Bank of England's reputation in the hip pocket of private institutions, he still believes New York Fed should play the same role as the Threadneedle Street in as between the Government and the banks.

Mr. Volcker's background cable for any central bank New Jersey in 1927, he graduated from Princeton, took his master's from Harvard and did work at the London School of Economics. After a stint with the Fed's research department at the Chase Manhattan Bank, he became vice president of planning and then moved to the Treasury in Washington.

He is so tall that he is described as being twice the monetarist economist, man, though not quite as the crypto-socialist, John F. Braith. His stature gives him of personal prominence bankers are supposed to ab-

He differs from the norm in another way, in one of the few who have a cy-making experience in treasury. He thus has a world of the politician, who decisions are tempered by and that of the central bank is supposed to stand aloof from.

Ironically, Mr. Volcker the key policy-makers in the Department who helped at York Fed of some of its functions when the old Bre system of fixed currency rates was abandoned by agreement in 1971. Within to maintain fixed parities world's currencies, the New stature has diminished.

So while Mr. Volcker is restoring to the bank some power and prestige, it that wander its marble lower Manhattan still call him who took away its former, first place.

Toying With a Name Helps Sell the Toys

failure, many of today's licensing agencies have taken an active role in helping manufacturers design and market the toys based on their properties.

"We go to department stores and supply retailers with cut-outs, posters and other selling aids," said a spokesman for the Licensing Corporation of America.

But their involvement comes at a price. Most agencies now ask manufacturers to guarantee royalties of anywhere from $2,500 to "more than 10 times that amount," says Mr. Kublan. (Licensors usually claim 5 to 10 percent of a toy's sales volume.)

Manufacturers, who generally pay for all advertising themselves, often avoid running commercials during the same show from which their celebrity toys are derived. Instead of advertising its Cher doll during the Sunday evening Sonny and Cher show, said Frederick Pierce, senior vice president of marketing and operations for Mego, the company "spent substantially in excess of $1 million" on Saturday and Sunday morning TV spots as well as early morning and early evening weekday hours. Most other toy companies do likewise.

The economics of TV advertising (as well as the specialized audience aspect) makes it easy to understand why. A 30-second commercial on the prime time Sonny and Cher show is costing manufacturers $62,000 this month, while a similar commercial runs for about $7,500 on a Saturday morning children's show.

Although a few manufacturers have grumbled among themselves about the added costs of licensing, most are willing enough to agree to them. They simply let holiday shoppers pay the extra.

There's apparently plenty of pricing leeway. "We're selling a Fonzle doll [from the Happy Days TV series] in the $3 to $6 range," said a buyer for Two Guys. "A similar doll without Fonzle's name would sell for $1.99."

Yet few consumers seem to be complaining. Today's media-oriented children are very much aware of personalities and very firm about the kinds of toys they expect to find under the Christmas tree.

Only Mickey Mouse mysteriously remains in favor through the generations. Otherwise, dolls that a few years ago only had to squeak out Ma-Ma to be popular, are now passé, supplanted by the personality kids.

As for the criticism that toddler creativity is being impaired, toy-makers contend that today's licensed items are more realistic, and therefore more stimulating to a child's imagination.

Ideal's version of Archie Bunker's grandchild not only feeds, wets and is delicately advertised as being "anatomically correct" (having genitals); owning him allows a child to "participate more fully" in broadcasts of the All in the Family show, toy makers explain.

"Children want to identify with people and characters," said Jeffrey Besslow, with Marvin Glass & Associates, both a toy designing and licensing firm. "When he plays with the Six Million Dollar Man doll, he knows what the character is and what he can do."

But for others, the popularity of licensed toys encourages children's thinking to be blandly conventional.

"My little girl knows too much about what the real Cher is like," said one shopper who ignored the long rows of celebrity dolls at Toys R Us last week. "I'd prefer to force her to be a little more creative by giving her a doll whose story she has to make up herself."

But the licensing trend seems in no danger of fading.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see a kit for a Howard Cosell microphone on the shelves next year," said a spokesman for Toys R Us. "After all," he added, "if you had the choice of a microphone with no famous name on it and one that did, which would you choose?"

SPOTLIGHT

Showman for Food

Baum, super-restaurateur, presides over the quarter-mile-high complexities of dining at the World Trade Center.

be pointed out, "Today it's evident all over New York that people are willing to pay."

After leaving Restaurant Associates, Mr. Baum became a consultant with the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey as his principal client. The Port Authority was then building the World Trade Center on the bank of the Hudson River adjacent to New York's financial district.

Lower Manhattan was notorious for its lack of extensive dining facilities. The stockbrokers, bankers and lawyers of Wall Street ate in their private luncheon clubs at noon and went home for dinner. But the World Trade Center would bring 50,000 new tenants and an estimated 80,000 business visitors a day to the area.

Feeding all those people would become an extraordinarily complex task. Joe Baum decided to blend food service with the concept of "sky lobbies" as separate "neighborhoods" at various levels of the twin towers offering not only dining facilities but also barber shops, stationery stores, newsstands and the like.

Ultimately, the dining facilities alone will cost some $26 million, including the $7.5 million outlay for Windows. "We're very encouraged with what Joe's done," says James Crane Kellogg 3d, a member of the Port Authority's board. "We felt Joe was the best man in the business by far, that he could set things up and do it right. He's been doing the job. We've taken in over $5 million so far."

One critical thing Joe Baum had to decide was whether one company should operate all of the center's food systems or whether there should be competing operators. Mr. Baum decided that economies of scale—for example, central food purchasing and storage—called for the single operator concept.

Hilton International, the hotel subsidiary of Trans World Airlines, was retained as the operator and another company called Inhibio was set up as a Hilton subsidiary to do the job. In time, 1974 to be exact, Mr. Baum shifted from consultant status to the presidency of Inhibio.

Working from a command post overlooking the Hudson, only a few steps from his staff of reservationists on the 106th floor, he is involved in every aspect of the Trade Center's food service—from planning gourmet dinners for the Chevaliers du Tastevin in a private dining room at Windows to setting up coffee shops, delicatessens and "sidewalk" cafes near the subway entrances on the ground floor.

Eventually there will be 42 places to eat and drink in the Trade Center, (roughly half of seating capacity is in place now). Most will have their own kitchens, many will feature take-out service, and there will be retail bakeries and meat shops, even a store that sells various blends of coffee by the pound.

The logistics in feeding tens of thousands of people daily are enormous. Already, 800 pounds of lamb are served each weekend; 200 dozen eggs are hard-boiled and peeled weekly. Cooking stocks for sauces are prepared from scratch in 100-pound batches and blast-frozen for storage.

Mr. Baum so far has assembled a staff of 800 and this will nearly double when all of the facilities are completed. Most of his lieutenants, including Alan Lewis, director of Windows, and Rene Beck, purchasing manager, came from Restaurant Associates.

"The World Trade Center was a restaurateur's dream—start from scratch and create a whole community of food services," Mr. Baum said recently between a telephone call from a city judge seeking to shortcut the reservation system ("Of course we can, your honor.") and a planning session for a special gourmet dinner ("Are the white truffles packed in rice? Do we have the thrush and the grouse or did we get substitutes?").

For a dinner for a gourmet group called Les Vikings, Mr. Baum ordered bunches of fresh grapes served with dessert and then ordered 25 pairs of Swedish silver-plated grape shears, with a member's name engraved on each.

It is this showman's flair plus attention to detail that may well explain Mr. Baum's success. "Joe doesn't ask how much he can make out of a piece of lamb," said an associate, "he asks how much he can give a customer for his money."

Mr. Baum's attention to detail extends to dining with his chef, André René, personally serving the French maitre d'hôtel caviar, truffles and mousses of pigeon to be served the same evening in his restaurant. Moments later he may be found in his office deciding how to accommodate the 1,780 additional applicants for membership in the luncheon club that occupies Windows at midday.

It is called, simply, the Club at the World Trade Center, and its 2,280 existing members pay fees ranging from $50 annually for nonresidents of New York up to $420 a year for those whose business is south of Canal Street in lower Manhattan. (Those expected to use it most, are charged the most.) The public is also admitted to Windows at lunchtime, but a fee of $10 for the host and $3 for each guest is added to the bill. No surcharges are levied at dinner, when Windows operates as a fully public restaurant.

The restaurant's modern decor and the multilevel structure that permits unobstructed views of the city and port below were designed by Warren Platner, the architect who also designed the interior of the T.W.A. terminal at Kennedy Airport and of the Ford Foundation's building on East 42d Street in New York.

Mr. Baum often puts in a 12-hour day, including personally supervising special events that drag on through the evening. He belongs to many of the same gourmet and wine societies that use his premises and is as likely to be seen seated at a table as a participant as he is hovering in the background as the chief planner.

To shorten his commuting time, he has moved with his wife Ruth from a 10-room duplex penthouse on Park Avenue to a loft that they are renovating on East 10th Street in Greenwich Village. They try to spend most weekends at their country home in North Salem, in northern Westchester County, where they can be found entertaining guests on their own platform tennis court—and serving fine food and wine.

Let Value Line Help You Identify

400 STOCKS TO AVOID NOW

Plus 100 stocks that may outperform most others in the next 12 months

An otherwise solid stock portfolio can be largely undone by a few "misfits." So it's important to be able to identify "weak" stocks as well as "strong" ones. And to be immediately aware of significant changes in any of your stocks.

That's why The Value Line Investment Survey every week of the year ranks 1600 stocks—each relative to all the others—for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months, as follows:

100 stocks are ranked 1 (Highest)
300 stocks are ranked 2 (Above Average)
800 stocks are ranked 3 (Average)
300 stocks are ranked 4 (Below Average)
100 stocks are ranked 5 (Lowest)

Note: Not every stock will always perform in accordance with its rank. But it is a fact that favorably ranked stocks, as a group, have outperformed poorly ranked stocks with remarkable consistency since the ranking system was introduced in 1965.

While past performance can never guarantee future success, this record of more than a decade of successful discrimination strongly suggests that you can tilt the investment probabilities in your favor by using the Value Line ranks.

400 Stocks to avoid now
The ranks are designed to measure probabilities. We expect higher-ranked stocks to go up more in a rising market—or down less in a market drop—than lower-ranked stocks. And conversely...

We expect the 400 stocks ranked 4 or 5 for Performance to go DOWN MORE or UP LESS, on average, than the 1200 others within the 12 months directly ahead.

The 400 stocks currently ranked unfavorably (Value Line Nov. 19) include some very big names. Just a few of them are U.S. STEEL, STANDARD OIL (OHIO), STEELING DRUG, HOLIDAY INN, EASTMAN KODAK, GREYHOUND CORP., AMERICAN BRANDS, AMERICAN CYANAMIDE. (This may show why you shouldn't confuse the excellence of a company with the current timeliness of a commitment in the stock.)

Looking for performance?
Even if your primary objective is yield, or safety, or long-term appreciation, we suggest you stay away from stocks currently ranked 4 or 5 by Value Line for Next-12-Months Performance.

And, of course, if superior relative price action is what interests you most, then we suggest you give special attention to the 100 stocks currently ranked 1 (Highest) by Value Line for Probable Market Performance in the Next 12 Months.

Updated every week
Every week—for EACH of 1600 stocks—The Value Line Investment Survey in its Summary of Advice and Index presents the up-to-date...

a) Rank for Relative Probable Price Performance in the Next 12 Months—ranging from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest).

b) Rank for Investment Safety (from 1 down to 5).

c) Estimated Yield in the Next 12 Months—(100 stocks offer yields of 8.3% and up—Value Line Nov. 19.)

d) Estimated Appreciation Potentiality in the Next 3 to 5 Years—showing the future "target" price range and the percentage price change indicated. (100 stocks are in the 270% to 850% range—Value Line Nov. 19.)

e) Current price and P/E, plus estimated annual earnings and dividends in current 12 months. Also the stock's Beta.

f) Very latest available quarterly earnings results and dividends, together with year-to-date comparisons.

In addition, each of the 1600 stocks is the subject of a comprehensive new full-page Rating & Report at least once every three months—including 23 series of vital financial and operating statistics going back 10 years and estimated 3 to 5 years into the future.

SPECIAL OFFER
If no member of your household has had a subscription to Value Line in the last two years, you can now receive the complete Value Line Investment Survey for the next 10 weeks for only $29 (about half the regular rate). We make this special offer because we have found that a high percentage of those who try Value Line for a short period stay with it on a long-term basis. The increased circulation enables us to provide this service for far less than would have to be charged our long-term subscribers.

in the Hors d'Oeuvre or City Lights Bar. That Joe Baum should be the man behind Windows comes as no surprise to cognoscenti of the food business. For years he has been regarded as one of the top creative minds in restaurating.

It was Joe Baum, an almost dapper man who stands 5 feet 8 and weighs in at an unwavering 153 pounds, who, as president of the Restaurant Associates chain, created the Four Seasons, Forum of the Twelve Caesars, La Ronda del Sol, Charley O's and a group of other mostly New York dining establishments that achieved success in the 1960's before falling victim to overexpansion in the 1970's. All tried to create ambience with a theme—for example, the Irish pub atmosphere at Charley O's and Spanish decor at La Ronda del Sol.

Mr. Baum, now 56 years old, had joined Restaurant Associates in 1953 as manager of the New Yorker, the restaurant at Newark Airport, after working at the Boca Raton Hotel and Club in Florida, several New York companies and his family's resort hotel in upstate New York at Saratoga Springs. Like many other restaurateurs, he is a graduate of the Cornell University School of Hotel Administration.

He rose through the management ranks at Restaurant Associates during its expansionist period in the 1950's and 1960's, becoming president in 1963. In 1970, he resigned. The company had merged with Waldorf Systems, which operated cafeterias and other lower-priced dining facilities and had made a policy decision to de-emphasize expensive, high-quality restaurants.

The stock market had peaked in the late 1960's, costs were rising sharply in the restaurant business and the Internal Revenue Service was cracking down on expense account dining. "There was a prevalent feeling that medium-to high-priced restaurants would disappear," Mr. Baum recalled.

So Restaurant Associates Industries Inc., the surviving company, sold off the Four Seasons, Charley O's and La Ronda del Sol—and hit earnings problems. The 33,000 shares of R.A. stock retained by Mr. Baum have fallen from a high of about $48 each in 1968 to less than $2 last week on the American Stock Exchange.

"I really am a strong New Yorker," said Mr. Baum the other day, recalling his departure from R.A., "and felt there was a good market for good restaurants." As broker is hard," they note, admitting that "you don't have to be a genius to be a good broker." Hutton advises utilizing the old "innocent victim" scheme—asking questions "which you know the answers to but which others you are considering. Don't choose the first person you talk to, Hutton admonishes. One supposes that Hutton's "account executives" are trained to sidestep the ploy.

How can I determine how much a stock is worth? How would you define a growth stock? What is book value per share? How credible are net tips? How would I choose among companies? The short answers are all there, and it's basic, solid information. Presumably there's a need for this sort of presentation for the small investor.

The records identify the American Telephone and Telegraph Company as an electric utility, but otherwise, the album is gold-free. JOHN H. ALLAN

She Grrrs for the Monarch

"She could sell me both ends of the Brooklyn bridge," said one fan. That's nice. Because the subject, Catherine Deneuve, who has been advertising Chanel No. 5 time fragrances for six years, is now also associated with Lincoln-Mercury. More precisely, she is associated with the car company's classy commercial, the Monarch.

Before Deneuve, Chanel had used an abundance of attractive, but more or less anonymous, models in advertising for its proper share of the $950 million-a-year women's fragrance market. Many of those models—Alli McGraw, Suzi Parker, Candice Bergen and Carol Lynley among them—went on to im- press their own names on the general public.

Then came Miss Deneuve, "the first clearly defined personality to be used in our ads," according to Rose Harten, who speaks for Chanel on such matters. "She represents to us the ultimate French woman—appealing and sophisticated." (Chanel first came to America, from France, in 1924.)

That's how it is in the $12.50-for-a-quarter-ounce world of Chanel No. 5. Now for the $1-a-pound world of the Monarch. Miss Deneuve is not saying, by the way, what either world is paying her. Neither, in fact, is anyone else.)

Last year, the Ford Motor Company's Lincoln-Mercury division did a market study of those who drive it to deter- mine what special factors, if any, set off the Monarch in their minds. The feedback had it that the car had excep- tional looks and handling quality. John B. Bandersee, advertising manager for Lincoln-Mercury, summed this up to mean "a touch of class." Miss Deneuve again.

It was September when she shot her first commercial for the car company, describing in her very French accent—much the way she does in the Chanel commercials—why she likes the prod- uct. At the end of the Lincoln-Mercury commercial, the camera comes in for a close-up. Instead of the cougar cat growling (the cat has been the symbol for the division for a number of years) Miss Deneuve gives a grrrrr.

One advertising agency president felt it was a mistake on her part to sign with Lincoln-Mercury. "Her image was that of high credibility, pure and non-commercial, the minute she signed she lost all that. It's like having a love affair, and now you find that she's see- ing another man."

A Bear Market in Bankruptcies

Despite the currently sluggish pace of the economic recovery, business failures have been fewer this year than last, according to the business economics division of Dun & Bradstreet, which keeps tabs on bankruptcies.

In November the number of com- panies topping into bankruptcy was vir- tually unchanged from November 1975, while 9,137 failures occurred in this year's first 11 months, down 16 percent from the bankruptcy total in the com- parable period of last year.

Complete data on the dollar volume involved in this year's bankruptcies are not yet available, but the indications are clear that the total declined this year. In the first 11 months, for example, an average of 63 business failures involving liabilities of at least $100,000 occurred each week. This compares with an average of 70 a week in 1975. The economic recovery has also re- duced the number of personal bank- ruptcies. According to the administra- tive office of the United States Courts in Washington, 33,579 individuals filed under Chapter XIII of the Federal Bank- ruptcy Act in the year ended last June 30, compared to 41,178 filings in the previous year.

Chapter XIII helps individuals stretch their debt repayments over longer pe- riods of time. Data for the period since last June are not yet available, but the rate of Chapter XIII filings seems to be lower, according to a spokesman.

estern Temporary Services, isco-based company which the temporary help field, d 2,000 Santas to stores Saks and Lord & Taylor asking it the country's No.

I Santa supplier, Santas are a small part (less than 1 percent) of Western's revenues, which are expected to be up about 50 percent from last year's $25 million, but Western's president W. Robert Stover figures that the market for rented Santas grows at a steady 10 to 15 percent annual rate.

"Let's say that Santas are the star on top of the tree," says Mr. Stover, poetically, of the Christmas market in temporary help. The thousands of tem- porary salespeople make up the bulk of the less opulent ornaments.

Mr. Stover even talks of Santa as an American export—his company sup- plied through its foreign branches more than a dozen Santas in Mexico, and 20 to 30 each in Denmark, Australia and England.

Santa was nice to Manpower Inc., too. The division of the Parker Pen Company and largest of the temporary help agencies, Manpower will supply 400 photogenic Santas to the Polaroid Corporation alone. To promote its new instant portrait camera, Polaroid has set up booths in about 150 shopping malls so that anyone who still believes can have his picture taken with Santa Claus.

On the other hand, Kelly Services Inc. and the Olsen Corporation, Nos. 2 and 3 in the temporaries field, found Santa a little less generous. Both have filled individual requests for Santas, but not on the scale of Western or Manpower.

Of course, when Santa became a business, concessions had to be made to organization. Both Western and Man- power have devised manuals for their Santas who, by the way, can expect to earn something between $3 and $4 an hour for dispensing the Christmas spirit. Both manuals have clauses prohibiting ho-ho-ho's (not believable) and Western even has advice in case the Santa suddenly has a wet knee (get up and change your pants).

that the immediate outlook is a period of consolidation of dullness," says Mr. Wer- wever, six or nine months e could see renewed inter- ng both gold and gold shares as "contracyclical movers," commended the accumulation issues "as a longer-term hedge against renewed inflation and the possibility of an extended stock market downturn." (Mr. Werden has- tens to note that by "extended down- turn" he does not mean a severe bear market.)

His favorite among gold producers in the United States and Canada is Campbell Red Lake Mines, an issue that has been selling near its 1976 high. "It's a pure play in gold," Mr. Werden says, "whereas Dome Mines derives earnings from petroleum and Hometake Mining is dependent upon lead, zinc and uranium." Among the investment trusts whose portfolios are filled with South African gold stocks, he prefers the Anglo American Gold Investment Company, popularly known as "Amgold," to the better-known ASA Ltd., because Amgold typically sells at a discount from net asset value and also provides a higher yield.

Thomas J. Holt, who runs an invest- ment advisory service, is sold on gold stocks generally, especially the South African gold producers. Approximately one-third of the portfolios that the Holt firm runs for investors is socked away in gold stocks.

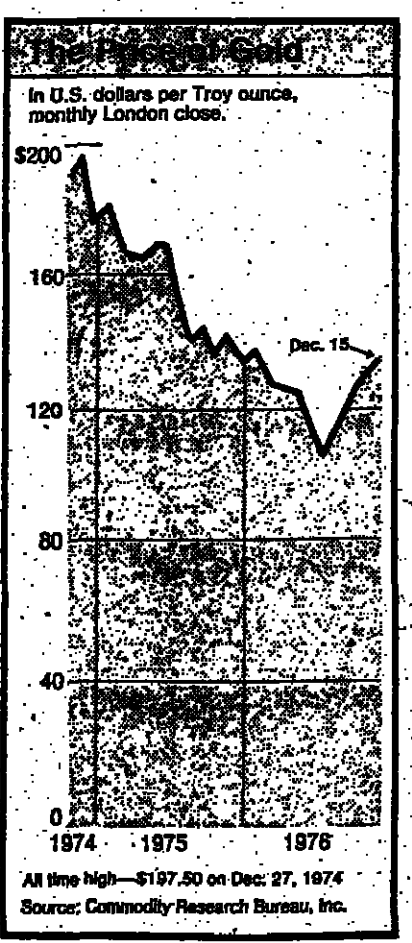

Mr. Holt admits that "in 1974 intense speculation caused the gold price to get too far ahead of itself" and thus set the stage for the subse- quent correction. What's his prediction for the future price of gold? "A new high, reaching above $200 an ounce, within the next couple years."

Now that the price of bullion has taken a turn for the better, Mr. Holt offers some advice to investors who are taking tax losses on their South African gold shares—some of which are selling at just 30 to 35 percent of their peak prices in 1974.

"Some people are taking tax losses and switching from one gold stock to another in order to retain their position in the group," he says. "Usually, how- ever, these investors are selling their low-quality or high-cost producers, and moving into the high-quality golds. That's the wrong strategy. In a rising gold market the greatest leverage exists in the low-quality gold stocks."

"If leverage has worked against you on the way down," he reasons, "why not take advantage of it on the way up?"

Among the low quality—admittedly more speculative—South African golds recommended by the Holt firm are Venterspost, Welkom, Western Areas and Stilfontein. Recommendations among the high-quality producers include Kloof, St. Helena and Vaal Reefs.

At Drexel Burnham & Company, re- search analyst Andre Sharon points out that the winds of disinflation have posed a negative for gold prices. But he doesn't envisage gold selling below $120 next year and he thinks that the price conceivably could go as high as $200.

THE ECONOMIC SCENE

That 'Pause' Has Ended

By THOMAS E. MULLANEY

President-elect Jimmy Carter, the nation and the world won't be getting one big gift they had all been coveting—but not really expecting—this year. But they may well be seeing a different and more important Christmas present under their trees next weekend.

The disappointment lies in the decision of the oil-producing nations to raise prices again. The divisiveness among the oil ministers at last week's meeting in Qatar had sparked some hopes that no price increase would emanate from the discussions at this time, and that, of course, would have been a precious presentation at this time for the industrialized and developing worlds alike.

However, after tortuous negotiations, the oil cartel surprisingly announced late in the week that it had agreed on a new, two-tiered price rise for their essential commodity. For the next six months, prices charged by Saudi Arabia and Abu Dhabi, which account for one-third of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' production, will go up by 5 percent, while prices charged by the other 11 members of the cartel will go up by 10 percent.

The only reasons for cheer over that outcome were the realization that the increase was not larger than it was, the fact that the cartel was not able to resolve a basic quarrel for the first time, and the hope that the higher prices might not prevail for very long since Saudi Arabia, the major producer, indicated that it would step up its output.

One observer suggested that the decision, disappointing as it was, might have been preferable to a unanimous agreement to continue a price freeze because that might have preserved a solidarity in the cartel that would have led to greater price increases later on.

The disappointment over imminently higher prices for petroleum products aside, the world will have reason for elation in another area when it is realized that the troublesome summer-fall "pause" in business activity in this country appears to have ended at last. A rising economy in the United States, of course, bears favorable implications for many other lands.

There has been no general perception as yet of the improving tone in economic conditions here, but it will be known once the analysts begin peeking under the wrappings. Economist Irwin Kellner of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, one of the first to discern the slowdown that was coming earlier this year, has now turned much more optimistic, stating flatly that "the pause is over." Henry Kaufman, a partner in Salomon Brothers, also said he believed "we are past the lull in economic activity, and we are starting the new year in better condition for our financial system than at the start of the last three or four years."

Some hints of a turn in the economy came last week in the Government's monthly reports on increased industrial production and personal income, as well as in its revisions on the leading economic indicators for recent months. These seemed to offset the only slightly downbeat statistic, the housing figures for November.

The most convincing item was certainly the disclosure that industrial production in the United States rose by a particularly vigorous 1.2 percent in November to a new peak of 132 percent of the 1967 average—fractionally above the previous high in June 1974. That strong gain reversed two months of moderate 0.4 and 0.3 percent declines. The strength was pervasive among consumer goods, business equipment and nondurable materials.

The upturn supported the earlier belief that strikes in the auto, rubber and equipment lines in recent months had been a major factor in holding down the overall rate of output at the nation's factories and mines.

The better-than-expected report on industrial production explains the improved employment figures and personal income for November—factors that may have an important bearing on the trend of retail sales at this Christmas season. While the unemployment rate was rising to 8.1 percent last week under the continuing influence of continued growth in the labor force, the total number of people at work was still showing impressive gains. The month's gain in jobholders was 350,000.

Thus, since the end of the recession in April 1975, there have been some 4-million new jobs created in the American economy, or about 5 percent of the total workforce. Never before in a similar period after previous recessions had a greater percentage of new jobs been added in industry.

Another indication of a better economy was contained in the upward-revised statistics for the leading economic indicators for the August-October period. Instead of remaining unchanged, as previously reported, the October index is now said to have risen by 0.2 percent, the September decline is now shown as 0.6 percent, instead of 0.9, and the August drop is now put at 0.4 instead of 0.8.

Buttressing the outlook was the disclosure by Edgar B. Speer, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, the nation's largest steel producer, that the company's "order intake has shown improvement the last six weeks." In an interview here, he also said that orders for capital goods, which had been lagging this year, "are beginning to bubble up, mostly for light construction."

However, the most telling evidence of a turn in the economy may be yet to come. It should be revealed in the retail sales figures for December on which every one has been focusing, including President-elect Carter himself, for a clue to future business trends and as a major basis for possibly new national policies early next year to stimulate the economy through Federal tax and spending measures.

It might be a bit premature to jump to any firm conclusions on the early retail figures for this month, but they have been quite encouraging in general. In the first week of December, the nation's retail sales surged above the $14 billion level, on a seasonally-adjusted basis. It was the highest level so far this year. Moreover, the Commerce Department recently reported a revision showing that retail sales had shown a strong recovery the last two months, with national volume up by 1.1 percent in October and a further 1.7 percent in November from the preceding months.

Of course, the December reports are early and the good results are spotty around the country. New York, for instance, is not achieving the gains that retailers had expected, and some are already resorting to promotional price reductions to spur sales, especially in dresses, coats, suits and sportswear, areas where consumer resistance was being shown to high prices. Elsewhere in the country, though, many merchants were reporting encouraging sales this season, particularly for the higher-priced quality merchandise.

If the weekly retail results for the rest of this month remain only at the first week's level, it would mean that December will show a gain of 5 percent over November and a whopping 15 percent over last December—much better than any one dared hope in view of all the recent gloom over the economy's course and the American consumer's mood.

Even auto sales, which had been lagging a bit last month, appear to have resumed their upward path again. While the increase for the most recent 10-day period this month was only 1 percent over a year ago, it looked puny only because it was being compared with one of the best selling periods in 1975.

Other business activity that is also showing improvement includes: orders for machine tools (now double what they were a year ago), business order backlog and capital spending. The 6 percent decline in housing activity last month, taken some of the bloom off the rose right now, but that sector of the economy is still running much stronger than it was earlier in the year—and permits for new houses continue to rise.

No doubt some of the recent favorable economic statistics are being looked at carefully by Mr. Carter and his advisers. The better tone in the economic data may account for his continued caution on the nature of the pump-priming programs he is considering for the early days of his Administration next month.

It still appears that some new injections of stimulus will be needed, particularly to create more jobs for youths and other high-unemployment categories, but some analysts are beginning to counsel against a hasty conclusion that a huge tax-rebate plan will be necessary.

Those who have taken heart from the recent improvement in the economic statistics hope the trend will have more longevity than some of the toys and other blatherings of every Christmas season. But, at the moment anyway, the brighter data are certainly providing a measure of "seasonally-adjusted" cheer.

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Dow Ahead on Oil Price Hopes

Stock prices posted a moderate advance last week as investors were buoyed by hopes that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would increase oil prices only moderately.

Reflecting the market's moderate strength, the Dow Jones industrial average closed up 5.91 points at 979.06. Few issues made sharp moves last week, with most price changes limited to less than a point.

Late Thursday OPEC's 13-member states agreed to a two-tiered increase for six months for crude oil.

Initial reaction to the price increase on Wall Street seemed mostly favorable. Analysts noted that the price increase for oil would likely be held to an average of around 8.5 percent and realistically might amount to only 5 percent.

Also helping the market last week were indications that the Federal Reserve was acting to bring down interest rates. Lower interest rates help strengthen the economy by making business loans cheaper. They also lower the yields on bonds, thus making stocks relatively more attractive.

One of the most actively traded issues last week was American Telephone and Telegraph, which closed Friday at 63 3/4 after hitting 64 1/4—its highest price in a decade—earlier in the week. On Tuesday Telephone announced that it earned $1.61 a share in the November quarter, up from $1.30 a share in the November quarter of last year.

Big Board volume totaled 126.1 million shares last week, down from 133.2 million the week before.

In the credit markets, bond prices edged slightly lower on profit taking following their recent sharp advances.

ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

THE ORGANIZATION OF PETROLEUM EXPORTING COUNTRIES, meeting in Qatar, was badly split on extent of price hikes. Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates will raise the price of their crude oil by 5 percent on Jan. 1. The 11 other OPEC nations will go up by 10 percent and, after six months, by another 5 percent. . . . The Federal Energy Agency disclosed a $6 billion plan for oil storage to insure against supply losses from foreign sources. It envisions storing 500 million barrels in underground Gulf Coast caverns close to pipelines. . . . The Federal Power Commission was urged to make available larger supplies of natural gas to assist industry and prevent loss of jobs.

A PROGRAM FOR ECONOMIC STIMULATION will be announced by President-elect Carter before he takes office in January, but Mr. Carter said he was undecided on the extent of the tax-reduction or Federal spending involved. . . . The Committee for Economic Development, meanwhile, issued a report urging him to allow a quick, broad-based tax cut for consumers and businesses. . . . Industrial production in November rose sharply, reversing a two-month downward trend. The index, climbed 1.2 percent to 132 (1967=100) fractionally above the previous record of 131.5 set in June of 1974.

BUSINESS INVENTORIES IN OCTOBER rose 0.5 percent to $287.72 billion while sales leveled off at $189.14 billion, practically unchanged. . . . Personal income in November increased by $15 billion, or 1.1 percent, from October levels to $1,141.7 trillion (annual rate). . . . Thomas G. Murphy, chairman of General Motors predicted domestic car sales in 1977 would total 11.25 million. Auto production this year will be about 8.32 million as against 6.65 million in 1975.

THE BRITISH TRADE DEFICIT widened in November to $854 million with exports at $3.73 billion and imports at $4.58 billion. The nation, seeking a $3.9 billion loan from the International Monetary Fund, plans a new round of economy measures. . . . The pound closed at $1.6725, up from $1.6710. Gold closed in London at $133.40 an ounce on Friday, down from $135.90 a week earlier.

THE UNITED STATES MONEY SUPPLY (currency in circulation plus checking account balances) rose 5.13 percent in the 13-week period to Dec. 8. Edgar B. Speer, chairman of United States Steel said the recent 6 percent sheet steel price increase will be sustained. In Washington, the Justice Department said it was reviewing the price hike to determine if antitrust laws were violated.

PEOPLE: Charles L. Schultz was named as President-elect Carter's choice to head the Council of Economic Advisors. W. Michael Blumenthal, president of the Bendix Corporation, was his choice as Treasury Secretary. . . . Whitney MacMillan, president and chief operating officer of Cargill Inc., has been named chief executive officer.

MERGERS: Shareholders of General Electric and Utah International have approved the $217 million merger of the two companies, largest in history. . . . Walter Riddle has agreed to sell United States Lines to WUI for about $97 million in cash and notes. . . . Lear Siegler plans to offer $13.50 a share, or about $77.3 million for Royal Industries.

CITIBANK—
The place for new perspectives in Computer Services Management.

At Citibank, customer-oriented services such as product development, processing, marketing, technical planning and customer services are provided through a series of complete service management divisions which form the Operating Group.

The Computer Services Management (CSM) organization is the part of the Operating Group committed to providing technical leadership in minicomputer projects. CSM managers will work with Citibank professional staff and consultants by guiding in the implementation of automation projects using modern technology.

Growth within this vital group has created openings for:

• Project Managers The professional project managers in this area will handle the ordering and installation of the hardware and systems software. They will assist in systems conversions, testing and documentation. Responsibilities also include project staff education and training.

• Vendor Managers Vendor interface involves multi-million dollar contract negotiations and execution, technical and field engineering, support management, vendor evaluation, and business process management.

These positions require prior project management experience in a DP environment. Knowledge of minicomputers would be an asset. Successful candidates will also have outstanding communicative skills and the presence to deal with executive level management.

If you are qualified for a position in either area, please forward a complete resume which includes salary history and requirements to: Professional Recruiting, P.O. Box 944C, Wall Street Station, New York, N.Y. 10005. We are an equal opportunity employer, m/f.

It takes the best to sell the best

We have a once-in-a-lifetime career opportunity for the gifted and experienced individual with one of America's most respected publishers: an opportunity offering unlimited earnings potential and advancement into sales management within a short time period. This is not an ordinary career and we are not looking for the ordinary salesperson. The man or woman we are looking for must be interested in:

- Earnings of $40,000-$50,000 per year...the very first year!
- Selling to professional clients only.
- Receiving intensive top level training.
- Having a guaranteed territory.
- A practically competition free product line.
- A lifetime sales or sales management career.

This unusual individual will sell the high-quality, multi-product line of legal publications of this subsidiary of the Times Mirror Co., a world-wide enterprise, N.Y. Stock Exchange listed. The rewards can be unlimited for the innovative, motivated individual who can prove job stability and achievement in sales. No specific educational requirements necessary, but the following are a must: a high energy level, an exceptional degree of initiative and creativeness, no age requirements or restrictions. Our excellent benefits program makes this offer even more attractive.

AFRAID TO QUIT?

Progressive Companies Are Always Looking

If you've been thinking about quitting, the chances are that you should. It's better than waiting until you're fired. Because people who are unhappy with their jobs are also non-productive and poorly rewarded. And they're the first to go when the going gets tough. If you're earning $17,000... or $70,000 annually, a work situation which is better suited to your talents is bound to be more satisfying, more rewarding and secure. To find out how to make the most of your talents—and how to find greater satisfaction in what you do—why not phone or write for a confidential interview. No cost. No obligation. You'll wonder why you didn't quit a whole lot sooner.

Sports in 1976: Jock Lib

by Red Smith

It was the most unquiet year. In professional game sports, 1976 was the Year of the Jock Lib, a time of revolt against the feudal structure of baseball, football, basketball and hockey. The revolution was fought mostly in the courts, and it won for athletes, for the first time, some voice in their own future.

If it was a time of turmoil for the pros, it was not exactly an interval of dreamy tranquility for amateurs. The Games of the XXI Olympiad, in Montreal, were distinguished by the usual splendid athletic performances, the usual amount of cheating, discord and charges of biased or incompetent judging—and the first mass walkout of nations. The five interlocking rings on the Olympic emblem, supposed to represent the five continents joined in friendly strife, but the defection of black African and some Arab nations virtually eliminated one continent from the carnival.

In the whole 12 months there was never a dull moment, except for followers of the Jets, the Giants and the Mets.

Baseball's year began in the law courts, where ending with Charles O. Finley, the uninhibited owner of the Oakland A's, brightening Bowie Kohn's Christmas with a multimillion-dollar lawsuit.

Two days before last Christmas, Peter Seitz, final chairman of baseball's arbitration panel, said that Andy Messersmith and Dave McNally, players who had refused to sign 1975 contracts with the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Montreal Expos, had fulfilled their contractual obligations as free agents.

The standard contract bound the player for one year and gave his employer an option on his service for the next year. The rules provided that if a player refused to sign a new contract—which would include the built-in option for still another year—the employer could renew the old one with its terms for "a period of one year." The club owners argued that the terms renewed included her option that could be exercised a year later, and there would be still another option, and so throughout the player's career.

Seitz decreed that "a period of one year" meant months, not eternity.

The Agreement

The owners had gone to court in an unsuccessful attempt to keep the Messersmith-McNally case out of arbitration. Now, as the new year began, they went back to ask Federal Judge John W. Oliver to return the arbitration award. Judge Oliver upheld Seitz. The owners appealed, and lost again. Let's negotiate," said the owners, who had indicated that the reserve system was not negotiable.

Encourage a spirit of cooperation; they locked players out of training camp.

The players did cooperate. They conceded that an owner invested heavily in the development of new talent he should have a chance to get his money's worth out of the talent before losing it, they compromised. For 1976 and 1977, anyone who played out his option and be free; after that, he would need six years of major league service before applying for free agency.

Contrary to predictions, only 24 of the 600 players in major leagues played out their options. Eight of them were employees of the lovable Finley, whose attempt to salvage something from the wreck of his team had been stymied by Kuhn. Facing the prospect of losing his stars with nothing in return, he had traded Reggie Jackson, outfielder, and Tom Seaver, pitcher, to Baltimore early in the season, then had sold another outfielder and another pitcher, Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers, to Boston for $1 million each and still another pitcher, Vida Liner, to the Yankees for $1.5 million.

Andalized by the prices, Kuhn vetoed the sales of Rudi, Fingers and Blue, and Finley responded that the damage suit now in court.

Far better than anything that happened on the field

during the season and live after by far than the first-bitten World Series, with four straight Cincinnati victories over the Yankees, was the frenzied bidding for the best of the free agents. Player after player sold himself for a million or more.

The Yankees invested close to $5 million in Jackson and Cincinnati's Don Gullett. Rudi's price went to $2 million, and Fingers's passed $1.5 million, but none went to Finley.

Meanwhile, the reserve system was under attack in other games, which do not share baseball's exemption from antitrust law. In 1975, Federal Judge Robert L. Carter said of pro basketball:

"It is difficult for me to conceive of any theory or set of circumstances pursuant to which the college draft, blacklisting, boycotts and refusals to deal could be saved from Sherman Act condemnation. . . . The life of these restrictions, therefore, seems to be all but over."

This year bore him out. Under agreement reached before the National Basketball Association absorbed the American Basketball Association, a player now signs for one, three or five years and is free at the end of that time.

An Easy Solution

As long as the World Hockey Association bids for talent against the National Hockey League, players don't worry about the reserve system.

Pro football is a can of worms. "We will have three candles on our birthday cake at the Super Bowl," says Ed Garvey, executive director of the Players Association, meaning that the season now coming to an end was the third without a contract between the union and the National Football League. The league has fought for the status quo in five Federal courts and lost in all of them. The college draft; the "Rozelle rule," requiring compensation to a team that loses a free agent to another team; the no-tampering rule, and the standard player contract have all been declared illegal.

Obviously, it is imperative that owners and players get together and agree on compromises that the courts will not disapprove. Negotiations in this direction are proceeding, but not noticeably.

Tarkenton Throws 3 Scoring Passes—Foreman Stars

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Special to The New York Times

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., Dec. 18—The key play was the first play today as the Minnesota Vikings trounced the Washington Redskins, 35-20, in the playoff game. What was it? A simple off-tackle call on which Francis Tarkenton handed the ball off to Brent McClanahan, Minnesota's "other" running back, and McClanahan raced downfield for 41 yards to the Redskins 25-yard line. That set the mood, the tone, of the one-sided contest.

Three plays later Tarkenton completed an 18-yard touchdown pass to his tight end, Stu Voigt, and the Vikings were off and running. They kept on scoring and at the end of the third quarter were so far ahead, 35-6, that Tarkenton was retired for the afternoon by his coach, the imperturbable Bud Grant. Tarkenton had completed three touchdown passes, two to Sammie White, while Chuck Foreman, the No. 1 running back, had scored twice on runs of 2 and 30 yards.

This victory was the first for the Vikings in the N.F.L.'s so-called second season, the one that will end with the Super Bowl at Pasadena, Calif., on Jan. 9. "He'll be there," said Allen Page, the mighty Minnesota defensive tackle.

Cowboys or Rams

But there must be another victory first. The Vikings have one more game at Metropolitan Stadium this season, and that will come a week from tomorrow with the National Conference championship at stake. The opponent will be either the Dallas Cowboys or Los Angeles Rams, contestants tomorrow in the fourth and last playoff game of this weekend. Which would be the preferred opponent? "We don't care," said Page. "I'll say it again, we'll be there."

Apart from victory, the Vikings ran up impressive statistics today. The most significant one was the 35 points. That figure equaled the most points anybody has scored on a team coached by the defensive-minded George Allen in his 10 years in as an N.F.L. head coach.

History will little note that another Minnesota team, the 1966 Vikings, with Tarkenton the quarterback, beat the Allen-coached Los Angeles Rams, 35-7.

Was there any satisfaction in defeating the coach who manages to antagonize so many foes? "Heck, no," said Tarkenton. "If you have to depend on things like that you are lacking real football players."

Tarkenton had something more to say. "When it comes to these playoff games you don't know what's going to happen, what the scores will be, who will win."

Grant was even more generous. He said of the Redskins, "Today's game

Oakland Triumphs on Score With 10 Seconds to Play

By LEONARD KOPPELT

Special to The New York Times

OAKLAND, Calif., Dec. 18—In a game that will be remembered in three entirely different ways by those of differing viewpoints, the Oakland Raiders eliminated the New England Patriots from the National Football League playoffs today with a 24-21 victory. The triumph came on Ken Stabler's 1-yard rollout run with only 10 seconds left to play in the game.

For the Raiders, who have taken pride in "overcoming adversity," the last-minute conversion of defeat into victory was typical of their season, which began with a similar 31-28 melodramatic triumph over the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Penalties Play Big Role

For the Patriots, completing their first winning season in a decade, the disappointment and frustration could not be separated from a feeling that the officials cost them the game—exactly the feeling the Raiders would have had if they had lost.

Because the third aspect of this drawn-out struggle was the exceptional manner in which the game officials spotted infractions. They called 26 penalties, four of which were refused, and some of them were in unusual situations. Whatever the merits of any particular call, the frequency and the timing—nullifying turnovers, converting third-and-long situations into first downs, and so forth—made any real football continuity impossible, and reduced the eventual outcome to a toss of the dice.

The final roll of the dice came up in Oakland's favor. The Patriots had already been given seven first downs by penalties—a one-game total surpassed

Turn and Count Wins Roamer by 2 Lengths

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

Sigmund Sommer's Turn and Count, a colt who has been raced sparingly because of leg problems, demonstrated again he has legs full of run when they are sound as he gained the first stakes triumph of his career at Aqueduct yesterday.

The 3-year-old son of Best Turn captured the $53,700 Roamer Handicap over 1 1/8 miles against seven 3-year-old rivals. Clocking in 1:56 1/2, Turn and Count, the second choice in the wagering by a slim margin, returned $6.80 for $2 straight.

"This horse is extremely fast but also one who seems to collect injuries," Frank (Pancho) Martin, the trainer, had said in a pre-race discussion of the colt with whom he has shown extreme patience. "As a 2-year-old, he suffered a bowed tendon and then months later he popped a curb behind."

Turn and Count was sidelined for 13 months before returning to the races early this fall. Since his comeback, he has finished no worse than second in five previous starts. His last two outings produced victories—in allowance races.

In gaining his third straight success yesterday—before a crowd of 20,383—the Sommer colt showed late speed and stamina. Berthed last for much of the trip, he finished with a rush to beat Decap Stable's 8-to-1 Patriot's Dream, by two lengths. Ruth E. Streit's 9-to-1

Smith, Lutz Win Doubles As U.S. Defeats Mexico

By NEIL AMDUR

Special to The New York Times

TUCSON, Ariz., Dec. 18—Welcome back Smith and Lutz, it's so nice to have you back where you belong.

That was the feeling today after America's most identifiable tennis combination played their first Davis Cup match in six years and clinched a victory for the United States over Mexico in the 1977 North American zone semifinals at the Tucson Racquet Club and Ranch.

The two Californians, Stan and Bob, separated from cup competition in recent years for a variety of reasons, overwhelmed a team playing together for the first time, Raul Ramirez and Emilio Montano, 6-2, 6-3, 6-4, for a 3-0

United States lead. The 1-hour-30-minute victory left meaningless tomorrow's final two singles pairing Roscoe Tanner and Roberto Chavez and Arthur Ashe and Ramirez.

[Italy won the 1976 cup final by taking the doubles from Chile in four sets, after having captured the first two singles at Santiago.]

Mexico had eliminated the United States in 1975 and 1976, each time winning the doubles and the series, 3-2. In this series the might-have-beens concerned Mexico's decision to use Chavez ahead of 31-year-old Joaquin Loyo-Mayo in singles and Montano, 23,

Why Does He Play So Hard? To Survive

By CHARLES TEKEYAN

I was young when I became a father, so young I still went out to play ball with the fellows in the neighborhood. And when my son became 5, we went out together to play with my friends. Alan was already incredibly adept at hitting and catching a ball. My friends were a bit embarrassed but also delighted to have him join their games.

Alan became well known in the neighborhood when he was about a year old. People began to stop on the sidewalk to admire him. They called him "Little Samson" because he was so sturdy built. He looked as if he was doing weightlifting.

When he became a teen-ager his abilities in all sports became superior to mine. I couldn't give him much competition, even in handball. But I noticed that Alan's friends couldn't keep up with him, either. He seemed to do everything not just powerfully but also relentlessly.

This extraordinary drive must have been the main reason he did well in school when he went to college. He had never liked football and he told me he joined the team only to please me. He was on the track team, too, and was outstanding there.

In college, his coaches and others advised him to become a professional football player after graduation. Scouts talked with him. But Alan wasn't interested. I told him I knew he didn't like football, but what about baseball or basketball? I thought he could make a lot of money as a professional in those sports.

But then I found out something that amazed me. Alan hates all the training and practicing that professional athletes have to do. He looks upon all of it as a boring burden. He said he couldn't take it year after year. Many times he would have to hold back during a game or yield to a teammate for reasons of strategy—and that would be unbearable, too.

The Thrill of Participating

Alan isn't a showoff, but it seems that he likes sports only when he is in the center of the action and the action is in full swing. And that is not the whole story.

Alan is a lawyer now. He recently passed the bar examination. He works in a quiet office, and it must be boring to sit at a desk and look at documents endlessly. He doesn't even have the action that a trial lawyer has. But Alan makes up for all this monotony and immobility the moment he goes home.

At the office he's Clark Kent, but at home he becomes Superman. He changes clothes and starts flying through the city. It's called jogging, but when he does it, it looks like flying because he goes so fast.

He still plays handball, basketball, tennis and now squash racquets. In fact, he spends 40 to 60 hours a week in athletic pursuits. Luckily, his work allows him to get home early most days. But I've been worrying about him lately.

A Man Possessed

He plays every game so ferociously that he is almost always bruised and injured. He plays five, six, seven and eight hours without a pause. Those who play with him reach exhaustion and have to drop out after three or four hours and be replaced by others.

Alan's strength seems to be limitless, but is it? It can't be. Why does he pretend it is?

"Why do you push yourself so hard?" I asked Alan a few days ago.

"I don't mind that, Dad," he told me. "Every athlete has to make his old body do a little more than it wants to do."

"Yes, but do you have to exhaust yourself every day?"

The Ultimate Test

"I'm not afraid of being exhausted. That's part of the fun," he answered. "What about death? You could have heart stroke, you know. And what about your heart? It was made to take a certain amount of activity and no more."

"Who knows what that amount is," he said. "And if I drop dead—well, that's the risk that makes the silly games I play worth the trouble."

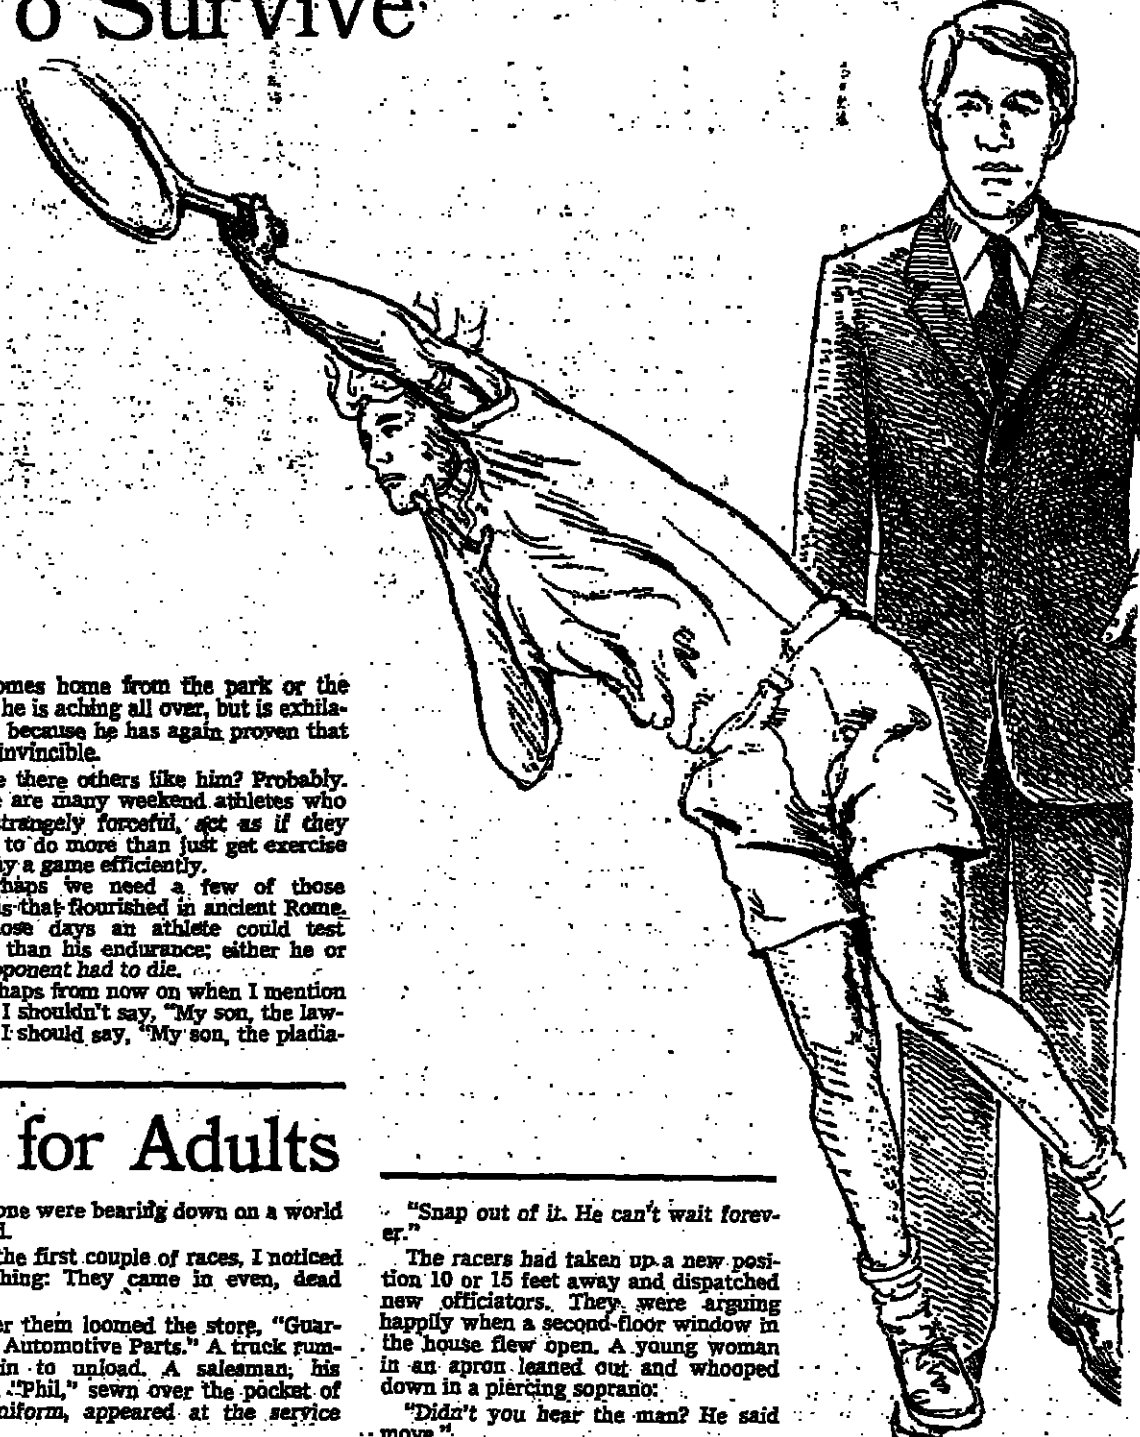

That's the secret to Alan's ferocious drive. He is an athlete for the most primitive reasons—to seek and survive the danger of death. Every night when he comes home from the park or the gym, he is aching all over, but is exhilarated because he has again proven that he is invincible.

Are there others like him? Probably. There are many weekend athletes who act strangely forceful, get as if they want to do more than just get exercise or play a game efficiently.

Perhaps we need a few of those arenas that flourished in ancient Rome. In those days an athlete could test more than his endurance; either he or his opponent had to die.

Perhaps from now on when I mention Alan, I shouldn't say, "My son, the lawyer." I should say, "My son, the gladiator."

Children's Games: A Lesson for Adults

By RICHARD M. GUMMERE JR.

A store selling auto parts formed one arm of the L, a wooden house and a body shop the other. In this angle, that sultry afternoon, I counted 10 children, all busy. Though the temperature was climbing through the 90's, they were running races.

The older ones, as Committee, took turns in two tubular chairs with green and yellow plastic straps. They would send a child partway down the lane and another farther down, to officiate. Then, after long and loud discussion, two racers would step forward.

Waiting for my repair man, I sat in the shade, near the officiator in the middle. She gazed me and said:

"We're racing."

Then, at a sign from the chairs, she hollered:

"Get ready."

Pause. "Get set."

Long pause for drama.

"Go!"

They're off, through the August

A Record in Sight?

She held her arms out, and as the runners passed they slapped her hand. They tagged the boy at the end, turned around and started back. After another ceremonial slap halfway, they neared the finish line with the easy lops of well-coordinated children. The others gesticulated, danced, shrieked as if someone were bearing down on a world record.

In the first couple of races, I noticed one thing: They came in even, dead heat.

Over them loomed the store, "Guarantee Automotive Parts." A truck rumbled in to unload. A salesman, his name, "Phil," sewn over the pocket of his uniform, appeared at the service door.

"Get out of the way," he bellowed. "All of you. Wanna get killed?"

The children were set up on a stretch of shimmering asphalt where large letters spelled out:

"LOADING ZONE. NO PARKING."

They obediently picked up the chairs. Phil bellowed again:

"Snap out of it. He can't wait forever."

The racers had taken up a new position 10 or 15 feet away and dispatched new officiators. They were arguing happily when a second-floor window in the house flew open. A young woman in an apron leaned out and whooped down in a piercing soprano:

"Didn't you hear the man? He said move."

Again, they picked up. Her voice rose higher.

"Next time I'll come down and bust somebody."

The window banged shut. They carried their chairs another short stretch, still avoiding the shade, as the heat radiated from old cars and strewn parts.

Magisterially, Committee chooses a couple to run. They're off. Slap hand, tag and man, turn back, another slap and, finally, pandemonium. Another photo finish, another dead heat.

Atmosphere getting soggy. Next race. Some of group, to watch better, get on hood of brand new tow truck.

"Charlie's Auto Body-Complete Fleet Service - Repair - Refinish-Sandblasting-Refinishing."

Here's the start:

"Ready."

Runners poised, crowds excited. From the dock bursts Charlie, bawling:

"Off that truck. How many times do I have to tell you? Go around to the back."

He waved a tool angrily.

"And hurry up!"

Going home, I didn't brood over the bad news about my 5 door—"three hundred bucks, a quarter'll do it"—or that I'd ed me. Not only the bad news but the adults (Did it come from their own innocence)? No of empathy. (Can the two communicate)? But, especially Amidst all the excitement won. And the symmetry seen.

Is there a chivalry in the world should try to develop?

Hockey Violence: Courts Don't Have the Answer

By ARTHUR M. DIAMOND

With the hockey season here, let me be the first to call for a needed reform.

It's time for prosecutors to stop indicting hockey players.

Why? Two basic reasons.

First, because after two trials, it has become apparent that juries will go extremely out of their way to find a way to not convict these players. So far, in fact, that the only two juries that have heard this type of case have reached verdicts on defenses that are legally impossible. More about that later.

The second reason is a bit more philosophical. Even if juries were to convict hockey players, I believe that such convictions would serve no rational purpose within our system of criminal justice.

Before going into detail, a short refresher course in athletic prosecution would be helpful.

Mistrial at Forbes Trial

Exhibit A: State of Minnesota vs. David Forbes. In a National Hockey League game between Boston and Minnesota, Forbes hit Henry Boucha of Minnesota in the face with his stick. The blow fractured Boucha's eye cavity. A county prosecutor, Gary Flakne, announced Forbes's indictment for aggravated assault, a felony punishable by a mandatory three-year prison term. A mistrial was declared when the jury could not reach a verdict.

Exhibit B: People vs. Dan Maloney. In a game between Detroit and Toronto at Toronto, Maloney allegedly attacked Brian Glennie of Toronto from behind and knocked him senseless. Crown Prosecutor Roy McMurtry announced Maloney's indictment for assault. The jury found Maloney not guilty, but it said in a statement, "While our verdict was based on the evidence and the law, we are unanimous in our feeling that these actions are not condoned by us."

Exhibit C: People vs. Bridgman, Salek, and Watson. After a brawl during a Stanley Cup game between Toronto and Philadelphia, McMurtry announced the arrest of these three Flyers on various counts of assault. This case is pending.

Why prosecute hockey players? I believe the decisions of McMurtry and Flakne were based on the following assumptions:

That these incidents clearly did not occur during the normal flow of a game; that is, they were more of an attack than a response to normal rough play, and thus could not be defended as such.

That while N.H.L. violence appeared on the increase, the league had made only one major rule change in the last decade to combat that violence.

That these cases could be won.

Convictions Are Elusive

Two trials later, it appears that the cases were not so winnable. Why have the juries failed to convict?

Let's look at the Forbes verdict first. Forbes's attorney, Ron Meshbeker, argued that the incident was part of the game, and that all players know what can happen to them in a violent game like hockey. In essence, he contended, hockey players consent to this type of thing, and apparently the jury accepted his argument.

But it is legally impossible to consent to an assault. Consent as a defense is applicable only in a civil trial.

If you think the law confused the prosecutors, imagine their state when they heard Boucha, the victim of the attack, say:

"It was a dumb thing to do. There's an unwritten rule you don't maim the guy. But I'm sure he didn't mean it. It's part of the game."

And Glennie, the victim of Maloney's attack, testified that "all hockey players stand ready to accept physical assault when they take the ice." He added that he bore no ill will toward his attacker.

It's All in the Game

Next, the philosophical problem. I contend that even if these cases were winnable, they would be unacceptable morally. Why would we punish a hockey player? Ostensibly to discourage future incidents and attacks such as the ones involving Forbes, Maloney and the three Flyers.

The problem is that incidents such as these are not premeditated. They occur during the heat of a game when a player's adrenaline is pumping, his fever pitch. Is it really reasonable to expect that these players can calculate the effect of the criminal law on their actions? I think the very nature of hockey as a game would preclude such on-the-spot calculation. It is too fast and too rough, and it is probably too late to reprogram today's hockey players and their rough style of play.

What then, is hockey to do, without the criminal law as a sanction against such attacks? Change the rules. There are too many intelligent officials, coaches and owners for hockey not to find satisfactory alternatives.

Of course, the criminal law will always be there for the extreme incident. And when the rule changes do come, hockey will be so much the better for it.

And who will the league have to thank? Why, the county attorney from Minnesota and the crown prosecutor of Ontario.

You could look it up.

Brian Glennie of the Toronto Maple Leafs on the ice after being struck by Dan Maloney of the Detroit Red Wings in a 1975 game. Maloney was indicted for assault. A jury acquitted him, but said it did not condone his deed.

Winning Isn't Everything at Grinders

To the Sports Editor:

Enough is enough. Dave Anderson's recent interview with Vince Lombardi's son continues to perpetuate the fiction that it was Lombardi who first said, "Winning isn't everything; it's the only thing."

Forgetting for the moment whether we want our children to grow up that way, let us remember that it is not Lombardi's quotation. It is a misquoting of a statement made by John Wayne, playing a football coach in an old movie entitled "The Fighting Seabirds."

No man should be memorialized by a gasoline station and laundry because of someone else's words.

Salute to Allie Sherman: Just Look at the Record

To the Sports Editor:

In your Dec. 14 story on the Brooklyn College football player who signed with the Canadian League, mention was made that he was the first from that school since "Allie Sherman" went on to disappointment with the Giants.

True, Allie's career as Giant coach did end on a disappointing note in 1969, but it should be pointed out that he also gave this town some of its greatest football thrills. The Giants, under Sherman, won N.F.L. Eastern titles in 1961, 1962 and 1963. He was named N.F.L. coach of the year in 1961 and 1962, a double no other coach ever achieved, not Lombardi or Shula or Landry or any of the others.

Things went downhill for Allie—as they do for most pro coaches, since the sport works in talent cycles—but it seems unfair to describe his entire coaching career as a "disappointment."

One wonders whether John McVay, the new Giant coach, will come close to the kind of years Allie Sherman had.

Applause at Wimbledon For Serving the Women

To the Sports Editor:

The tennis world should applaud the recent compromise agreement between the All-England Tennis Club and the leading women professional players, who will receive 80 percent of the men's total in prize money round at the 1977 Wimbledon Championships.

The threatened women's premiere tennis event, was and the Women's Tennis Association closer to the round party because they have their own entertainment value as the criteria of tournament sponsorship and prize-money vision ratings.

On the all-important of there are undeniably many, entered women players than lack of depth means few close against seeded players in rounds and infrequent upset cases, the entertainment of women's tennis is diminished.

My solution to the equal in controversy would be to raise the women's singles to 96 to 64 players and the doubles field from 48 to 32. "Toughen" their events from to last.

Tennis at Coney Island For the Young at Heart

To the Sports Editor:

Steve Cady wrote a race on Parsey Koundakjian, a tennis player. If you war tennis players ages 65 to 75 the ill-fated, uneven, concrete tennis courts of K in Coney Island.

These youngsters do not doors, only outdoors, all the year, in any weather or rain does not exist. Snow away.

This is tennis, with every book, no two-handed backhand and rallies that would draw at Forest Hills.

We have as our proudest Al Heller of Brooklyn, who old if you could arrange between Heller and Koundakjian would see an artist at work could play outdoors in this I'm sure he would enjoy it.

The Year in Sports: Free Agents, Reds

Joseph Durso

The Bicentennial year of the nation's 75th year of the National League and the first of the millennium decade, the Cincinnati Reds won all money games and Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association, won all the money wars. But it would have been a long time since the Reds' manager, Sparky Anderson, was asked if he had been surprised. "No," he said. "I told my coaches that if we won the first game in Philadelphia, we'd win seven in a row."

On the morning after Muhammad Ali retained the world heavyweight boxing championship with a unanimous but controversial 15-round decision that swung on the three official awarding him the last round, the disappointed challenger, Ken Norton, was talking about his thoughts in that final round.

"My corner told me I had the fight won, to be careful," Norton explained. "I wasn't tired at all. I think I could've applied more pressure and thrown more punches. But my corner told me I was ahead."

Among the listeners was Ali's trainer, Angelo Dundee, who had exhorted the champion to "close the show" with a big 15th round, just as he had exhorted Ali to "close the show" with a big last round that was the difference in a 12-round split decision over Norton in Los Angeles three years earlier.

"It's a cardinal sin for a corner to tell a fighter he's ahead," Dundee whispered. "You're always losing until you win."

Jackie Robinson called his Olympic discus gold medal an "achievement for myself," but the decathlon champion, Bruce Jenner, had better manners.

"I did all the work," the Californian said, "but I grew up in a country that allowed me to do what I wanted to do."

The Music Men

Nadia Comaneci had dazzled the Olympic gymnastics competition. But not many people realized that, in her floor exercises, she had danced, whirled and flipped to lively music that her Romanian coaches had incorporated into her routine against her pianist's wishes.

"But did Nadia want the new music?" a man wondered.

"Over there," he was told, "it's not up to the kid."

When the New York Jets named Lou Holtz as their new head coach, he displayed a sense of humor that he would desperately need.

"I guarantee we'll move the football," he said with a smile, "I just hope it's forward."

When the New York Giants opened with a 19-17 loss to the Washington Redskins, then coach Bill Arnsparger shook his head.

"It came up a little bit short," he said, "in situations we shouldn't come up short in."

The year before, John Mahaffey lost the United States Open golf championship in a playoff with Lou Graham, and now he knew that, after leading for most of the final round, he had lost the Open again. Jerry Pate had hit a No. 5 iron shot 190 yards out of the rough and over the lake on the 18th hole to within 2 feet of the cup. As the gallery at the Atlanta Athletic Club roared, John Mahaffey turned to Jerry Pate and said something.

"John told me, 'Great shot,'" Pate said later. "That's the kind of guy he is."

When the New York Nets were on their way to winning the American Basketball Association championship, Julius Erving was at his locker in the Nassau Coliseum after having scored 31 points against the Denver Nuggets in a 117-110 victory.

"Do you feel," he was asked, "you could do in the N.B.A. the same thing you do in this league?"

"Yep," he said quickly.

chained a 565-foot electronic scoreboard, shortened fences and hair dryers for the modern man.

Two days later, Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia made history by hitting four home runs in a row against Chicago in an untidy game that the Phillies won 18-16, in 10 innings.

In June, 47,855 fans and a prime-time television audience watched R. F. "Fergie" Fierstein, 5-11, after-ward, he took curtain calls like Sarah Bernhardt.

In July, the All-Star game was held in Philadelphia, with Fierstein pitching against Randy Jones of San Diego who also had long hair and a 16-3 won-lost record. The National League won the American League, 7-1, and won for the 13th time in 14 years.

Tim Lincecum of the Phillies hit a grand-slam home run against Pittsburgh but passed a teammate while rounding first base and was called out. It was that kind of year.

In the American League, the Kansas City Royals lost nine of their last 11 games but finally replaced the Oakland A's as Western champions (after five years). They carried the Yankees to the ninth inning of the first and last playoff game before Chris Chambliss hit a home run that won the pennant and almost wrecked a Yankee Stadium overrun by unruly spectators.

In the National, the Phillies lost 19 of 25 games while wasting a 15-game lead. Finally safe, they were swept in the playoffs by the Reds, who won their fourth pennant in six years.

In the World Series, the Yankees tried the designated hitter, walkie-talkie spy reports and hand warmers in the Arctic night air. No dice. The Reds relentlessly swept four games and became the first National League team in half a century to win two straight World Series.

At report-card time, Thurman Munson and Joe Morgan (again) were voted "most valuable." Randy Jones and Jim Palmer (again) were the best pitchers. Schmidt, with 38 home runs, took the power prize for the third year in a row. George Brett and Bill Madlock won the batting crown.

But the year ended as it began: with great change. Henry Aaron retired at 755 home runs. Sadasharu Oh of Japan passed Babe Ruth's 714 and headed for 800. Walter Alston left after 23 years as manager of the Dodgers. Charley Finley took the commissioner to court for taking $3.5 million in three mid-season blockbuster sales. Twenty-five players were auctioned in the first free-agent draft while 60 others were drafted by the new teams at Toronto and Seattle. And "freed" players everywhere lined up for long-range contracts and big bankrolls.

Celtics Return to Glory And A.B.A. Fades Away

By Sam Goldaper

Stability came to pro basketball in 1976 with the consolidation of the National and American Basketball Associations. After a nine-year struggle for survival, 22 franchises, countless lawsuits and $40 million in losses, the A.B.A. went out of business. Four of its seven franchises—the Nets, the 1975-76 champions; Denver Nuggets; San Antonio Spurs and Indiana Pacers—joined the N.B.A. as the league grew to 22 teams for the 1976-77 season. Each A.B.A. team paid a $3.2 million entrance fee.

The merger was made possible by the settlement of the Oscar Robertson class-action suit. While playing for the Milwaukee Bucks in 1970, Robertson, the president of the National Basketball Players Association, sued the N.B.A. on behalf of all players and the suit prevented merger talks between the leagues without player approval. The suit contended that the college draft, the option clause and compensating procedures violated antitrust laws.

Compromises were reached on all three issues. The option clause was eliminated from the standard player contract starting with the 1976-77 season. The compensation clause remained in effect until the 1980-81 season, when it will be replaced by the right of first refusal. The college draft was altered so that teams no longer would hold perpetual rights to players.

In other off-court activity, the spectacular Julius Erving, a Net holdout, was sold to the Philadelphia 76ers after the Nets had acquired Nate Archibald in a trade with the Kansas City Kings. Dave Cowens, the Boston Celtics' overpaying center, lost incentive and took an unpaid leave of absence.

In winning a 15th N.B.A. championship in the 30-year history of the league, the Celtics eliminated the Buffalo Braves, Cleveland Cavaliers and Phoenix Suns, each in six-game series. The Suns gained the final by upsetting

Pate's Memorable Shot Wins the Open

By John S. Radosta

Over the years there are many great golf shots, but how many memorable ones are there, like the pressure shots that helped Gene Sarazen, Ben Hogan, Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus win major championships? Last June, Jerry Pate added one: A No. 5 iron approach on the last hole of the United States Open at the Atlanta Athletic Club.

Facing a three-way or four-way tie, Pate needed a par 4 to win, and his drive lay in a tight rough on the right. The approach had to carry a lake to a two-tier green. Pate slashed his shot 190 yards stiff to the pin, perhaps 2 feet away. He sank the putt for a birdie and won by two strokes.

This was a rare season because Nicklaus failed to win one of the four Grand Slams, but he did win the Tournament Players Championship and the World Series of Golf, showcase events on the $5-million tour of the Professional Golfers' Association. Nicklaus finished high enough in other tournaments to earn $288,438 and lead the money list for the eighth time. He also was designated, for the fifth time, P.G.A. Player of the Year.

Exploiting the "Bite 'n' Wood" he brought just for Augusta National's par-5 holes, Raymond Floyd won the Masters by eight strokes, one of the best runarounds in the 40-year history of the Georgia tournament.

Floyd's 72-hole aggregate of 271, or 17 under par, tied the 1965 record by Nicklaus. Floyd shot Augusta's four par-5 holes in a record 14 under par—an eagle, 12 birdies and three pars. Thus the long holes yielded 14 of Floyd's 17 strokes under par.

Johnny Miller won the British Open at Royal Birkdale, but it took a 66 on the last round to beat a 19-year-old Spanish prodigy, Severiano Ballesteros, who had led for three days. Ballesteros tied for second with Nicklaus.

In the P.G.A. championship at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, Md., six players had a chance to win in the closing moments. Dave Stockton sank a 12-foot putt on the 18th green and won by one stroke. Floyd and Don January tied for second.

On the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, Judy Rankin, winner of six tournaments, was player of the year. She won $150,734, the first woman to earn $100,000 in a season. She was joined by Donna Caponi Young ($106,553) and JoAnn Carner, the Women's United States Open champion ($103,275).

Although another year went by without an American championship for Pelé, the 36-year-old Brazilian superstar proved in 1976 that he was still soccer's biggest attraction. Besides the huge crowds he lured to see him and his New York Cosmos play in Tampa, Tokyo and Paris, Pelé attracted close to 50,000 in Bloomington, Minn., an area virgin to pro soccer until last spring.

Pelé's presence encouraged several other international stars to join the 20-team North American Soccer League. One was Giorgio Chinaglia, a towering goal scorer from Italy, who despite missing the Cosmos' first five games, led the league in scoring with help from Pelé. They took the Cosmos to the playoffs, only to lose to Tampa Bay, the defending champion.

The Cosmos' failure to reach the championship game was a disappointment to CBS-TV and worse than that to the league. Because of small television audiences, the network decided not to show any more league games.

The Toronto Metro-Croatia defeated the Minnesota Kicks, 3-0, to capture the league title. That capped a year in which average attendance increased by 2,500, to 10,500 a game, and the value of a new franchise rose to a million dollars.

The American Bicentennial tournament did little for the native soccer fan. Team America, a mixture of international and American stars in the N.A.S.L., lost all three of its games, and the United States federation, sponsor of the tournament, lost almost $300,000. Brazil won the tournament from England, Italy and Team America.

Dave Anderson The Subtle Scenes

The headlines melt into history, but behind the headlines are the subtle scenes. And in 1976, as in every year, those are the memories that remain.

Bill Shoemaker would call Forego "the best horse I ever rode" after the 6-year-old gelding nosed out Honest Pleasure in the last stride of the Marlboro Cup despite sore legs and 137 pounds.

"I don't give Shoemaker any instructions," Forego's trainer, Frank Whiteley, had said. "What for? All the races he's run. But maybe this race I will. I'll tell him, 'Warm up and win.'"

His teammates on the Montreal Canadiens were shouting and ringing champagne after having won the Stanley Cup in a 4-0 sweep that dethroned the Philadelphia Flyers, but Guy Lafleur was speaking softly.

"I think it's good for hockey that we won," he said. "We play hockey. No brutality. We showed we could win without that."

In the Oakland A's locker room in Mesa, Ariz., several players were getting into uniform for their first spring training workout. At the time, nine A's were unsigned. Ken Holtzman, traded later to the Baltimore Orioles and then to the New York Yankees, was talking about Charles O. Finley, the A's owner, when he glanced at the cover of the A's media guide.

"World champions in 1972, 1973 and 1974 and we're gonna fix 'em in '76," he said, reading the cover's motto. "No, we're gonna fix 'em in '76."

The headlines melt into history, but behind the headlines are the subtle scenes. And in 1976, as in every year, those are the memories that remain.

Two Big Stars of Tennis Are Outshone by a Villain

By Tony Kornheiser

Chris Evert was the heroine. Jimmy Connors was the hero. The Nastase was the villain. But in the melodrama that was tennis in 1976, Renee Richards was clearly the most unforgettable character. Miss Richards, the 41-year-old transsexual who was a ranked 35er player in the East when she was Dr. Richard's patient, came inside out this year. Her application to play as a woman in the United States Open championship led to the institution of a sex test, based on chromosomal identification, for all women entrants. The test, which was ardently supported by the Women's Tennis Association, all but barred Miss Richards from the Open, and she refused to take it.

The Nastase, who often put a foot in his mouth, tries something else.

The Open drew its largest crowds ever, largely the result of the behavioral antics of Nastase, who had become more a clown than a serious player. Although he was never defeated despite numerous outbursts of profanity and threats against officials—particularly in a notorious match against Hans-Jürgen Pohmann—Nastase was later suspended for three weeks by the International Lawn Tennis Federation.

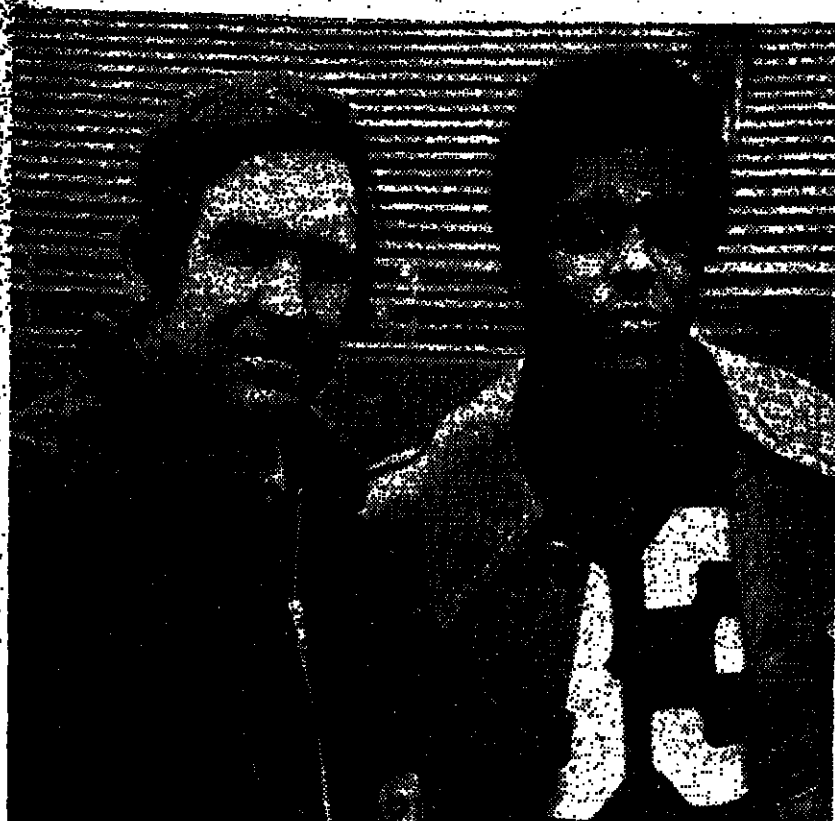

Miss Evert easily retained her top ranking among the women by defeating her strongest challenger, Evonne Goolbsong, in the finals of the United States Open and Wimbledon, the world's most prestigious tournaments. The men's top ranking has gone to Connors over Bjorn Borg despite Borg's triumph at Wimbledon. Connors defeated Borg all four times they met in 1976, including the starting four-set final at Forest Hills.

Last year's top-ranked male, Arthur Ashe, had a mediocre year as age seemed to wear him down in the summer months.

In international competition, politics was again more newsworthy than tennis. The United States Davis Cup team was beaten by Mexico, which later refused to play South Africa for political reasons. The Soviet team likewise refused to play Chile and was suspended from 1977 Davis Cup competition. When the Davis Cup Nations committee refused to suspend Mexico, the United States briefly withdrew from Davis Cup play, but re-entered the competition within a week. Yesterday, Italy won the Cup, defeating Chile.

The United States won the Federation Cup, the women's equivalent of the Davis Cup. But their competition was marred by the withdrawal of four nations—Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the Philippines—protesting the inclusion of South African and Rhodesian teams.

Dorsett Reaps Records As He Leads Pitt to Top

By Gordon S. White Jr.

The University of Pittsburgh and its outstanding tailback, Tony Dorsett, were the No. 1 team and No. 1 player in the nation. The Panthers won all of their games and Dorsett won the Heisman Trophy. Then Johnny Majors, the Pitt coach, walked out on the Panthers. Never before had a coach resigned from the most successful team in a college season. But Majors wanted to go home and coach at his alma mater, Tennessee, rather than try to keep Pittsburgh at the top without the graduating Dorsett. Majors, Dorsett and the other Panthers will be together one more time—against Georgia in the Sugar Bowl Jan. 1 at New Orleans.

College Football

Maryland and Rutgers were the only other major teams to go through the regular season undefeated and untied, but neither threatened to dethrone Pitt as the No. 1 team. When Rutgers failed to receive a bid for a major bowl game, it decided to stay home.

Maryland will play Houston in the Cotton Bowl. Jerry Calborne, the Terps' coach, considered but then rejected the Texas coaching job vacated by Darrell Royal after 20 seasons. Frank Broyles also quit coaching after 19 years at Arkansas.

Pitt reached the top of the rankings as, one by one, the higher-ranked teams lost or were tied. First, Arizona State lost its opener to the University of California, Los Angeles. Then Missouri upset Southern California two days later and Ohio State two weeks later.

Texas had been upset by Boston College and Alabama was an early loser to Southern Methodist. When Ohio State tied U.C.L.A., only Michigan was ranked ahead of Pitt. That ended when Purdue beat Michigan in the biggest upset of the season and Pitt reached the top for the first time since 1957.

Dorsett finished his four-year varsity career by breaking or tying 18 records. The most notable were 6,082 yards rushing in a career, 1,948 yards rushing in a season (1976), 356 points in a career and 59 touchdowns in a career (tying Glenn Davis of Army).

Brown, won his first Ivy League title, sharing it with Yale. Cornell also ran, called Bob Blackman back to the Ivy League as head coach. Carmen Cozza of Yale quit as football coach to become athletic director, decided he would rather coach and then quit as athletic director to stay as coach.

N.F.L. Hurt in Court But Not on the Field

By William N. Wallace

Pro football's establishment, meaning the owners and their commissioners, Pete Rozelle, lost ground in the courts but did well on the coaching houses and on television during the National Football League's 57th season, which has three more weeks to run.

Pro Football

free-agent compensation rule (known as the Rozelle Rule) were declared violations of antitrust laws and therefore illegal.

The Rozelle Rule was hardly missed, but no one was quite sure how the N.F.L. would operate next year without a draft. The top 30 players from the college ranks will probably earn higher bonuses in competitive team bidding, but the other prospects and their agents may be disappointed by more modest contract offers.

Another off-the-field setback for the establishment was the failure of the owners' management council and the players' association to agree on a new contract covering some kind of a reserve clause system, pension payments, insurance, training-camp pay and other working conditions.

The players went through a third season without such a contract. Dan Rooney, the president of the Pittsburgh Steelers, and Dick Anderson of the Miami Dolphins, the head of the players' union, came close to an agreement, but it was opposed by Ed Garvey, the union's executive director.

On the playing fields, new franchises were launched at Seattle and Tampa making a total of 28. The Seattle Seahawks had an enthusiastic home audience for a team that won two of its 14 games.

There was somewhat less enthusiasm over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who set a record. They were the first N.F.L. team to lose all 14 games.

The N.F.L. recovered its 4 percent attendance loss of 1975 and the television ratings went up, meaning more people than ever were watching the games at home.

The sport's brightest star, O. J. Simpson, threatened to quit if he was not traded from Buffalo to a California team, but he relented on the eve of the opening game. Simpson had a great year, leading the league in ground-gaining again, but his team, the Bills, failed miserably, winning only two games.

There were new stars. Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears emerged as the new running luminary of the National Conference while Sammie White, the Minnesota Vikings' wide receiver, could anticipate most rookie-of-the-year honors.

With Joe Namath in eclipse, the quarterback earning the most respect was Baltimore's Bert Jones. His favorite receiver, Roger Carr, gained 1,112 yards catching Jones's passes.

The ruling hierarchy changed only slightly. There was only one brand-new playoff team, the New England Patriots, who turned around a 3-11 win-loss record of 1975 to 11-5. The Washington Redskins were back in the playoffs after missing last year. The others were returnees to the post-season competition—Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Oakland of the American Conference and Dallas, Minnesota and Los Angeles of the National.

The Steelers, who had won the Super Bowl for the second straight time last January, relaxed as the new season began, and after a month they had a 1-4 record. They were now straight games, led by a defensive unit that recorded five shutouts.

Television of out-of-town games kept pro football healthy and alive in New York because the local teams failed again. Between them, the Giants and Jets won six of 28 games, and their head coaches who started the season were gone by its end.

The sudden departure of Lou Holtz to the University of Arkansas left the Jets in turmoil, but the Giants seemed to generate enthusiasm by the final game.

John McVay replaced Bill Arnsparger after the Giants had lost their first seven games, and they became almost respectable, especially in defensive skills. Everyone agreed their new stadium in the Meadowlands of New Jersey was not only respectable but also remarkable.

Forego, Bold Forbes Brighten Racing Scen.

By Steve Cady

Bold Forbes in the spring. Forego in the fall—and controversy before, after and in between.

That's how it went this year on the thoroughbred racing front, a front disturbed by turmoil over taxation, inflation, medication rules and the growth of off-track betting. And, critics said, too many tracks offered too many racing programs.

On the track, the biggest moments were provided by Puerto Rican-owned Bold Forbes, the winner of the Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes, and Forego, who became horse of the year for the third straight year. Forego, a 6-year-old gelding owned by Lazy F. Ranch, capped his efforts by winning the 1 1/4-mile Marlboro Cup at Belmont Park carrying 137 pounds. Two weeks earlier, he took the Woodward under 135 pounds.

After the Marlboro, his handlers did something others might not have had the grace to do. With the weight-for-age Jockey Club Gold Cup at their mercy, they withdrew Forego and retired him for the year.

Royal Glint, another millionaire, wasn't so fortunate. He fell during a stakes race at Suffolk I in June, was returned to the racetrack later—and fractured a leg in the Michigan Handicap in A. He eventually was destroyed, met by an increasing number of this year as the use of Butazolidin pain-masking medication, became prevalent.

Earlier this year in Pennsylvania, Commodore Downs, a 15-year-old named Stonelake went 1 post. By human standards, his age was equivalent to more than 100. Even more incredible, Stonelake won the race at $23 for $2.

In harness racing, the major moment was the September opening of the Meadowlands, the new owned track in New Jersey six from midtown Manhattan. Locals accustomed to action on tracks quickly took to the new mile layout. And the Jersey quickly became the world's busiest operation in terms of attendance and wagering. On the national Keystone Ore, a 3-year-old pacer voted horse of the year. Steve was the leading 3-year-old trotter.

Ali Is Still the Champion But His Age Is Showing

Muhammad Ali likes to say, "I am boxing." He also is controversy. And for a change, the world heavyweight champion was involved in as much controversy in the ring in 1976 as out of it. At 34 years old, Ali was beginning to show his age. But he retained the title with controversial 15-round decisions—over Ken Norton and Jimmy Young—and knockouts of two foreigners, and he tarnished the title with a controversial 15-round exhibition draw with Antonio Inoki, a Japanese wrestler.

Three days after Ali's narrow triumph over Norton, the champion announced his retirement. "I declare," Ali said in Istanbul, "that I am quitting fighting as of now, and from now on I will join the struggle for the Islamic cause."

Skeptics believed Ali would change his mind. Less than two months later, he was talking about title bouts next year with Duane Bobick, Young and George Foreman. Soon he talked again of retiring—but last week negotiations began for an Ali-Foreman title bout next year.

But whenever Ali does retire, 1976 will be remembered as the year when his skills deteriorated. In the Sept. 24 bout with Norton, before 30,298 spectators who created a $2.4 million gate at Yankee Stadium, Ali was awarded eight rounds on the scorecards of Arthur Mercante, the referee, and Barney Smith and Harold Lederman, the two judges. Mercante had Ali ahead, 8-6, with one even. The judges each had Ali ahead, 8-7. All three officials gave Ali the last round.

"Great race horses come through by a nose," Ali said. "I came through by a nose."

"I thought I won it," Norton said. "Ali knew I won it. The people knew I won it."

Jimmy Young had the same complaint after his April 30 bout at the Capital Centre in Landover, Md., but the three officials had Ali comfortably ahead on points. Their verdict was loudly booed, compared to the mild reaction when the Ali-Norton decision was announced.

Ali's boring farce with Inoki on June 25 in Tokyo was even less combative. Virtually nothing happened. Inoki, on his back, kicked at Ali, who circled away from the wrestler. But a week later, Ali was hospitalized in Los Angeles with phlebitis in his left leg, the result of Inoki's kicks.

Ali's two easy title bouts were a fifth-round knockout of Jean-Pierre Coquemont of Belgium on Feb. 20 in San Juan, Puerto Rico, and a fifth-round knockout of Richard Dunn of England on May 25 in Munich. Ali earned about $12 million this year, including $6 million from the Norton bout.

In retrospect, many boxing observers believed that Ali's ability was drained by the 1975 epic in brutality with Joe Frazier ("the Thrilla in Manila") when the former champion did not answer the bell for the final round. Ali described that bout as "next to death."

Juantorena, Viren Feats Amaze the Track World

By Frank Lipky

In a track year marked by stunning Olympic performances, the brightest star was a 24-year-old Cuban who once failed at basketball and looked big enough and strong enough to succeed in football.

Track and Field

His name was Alberto Juantorena, and he became the first man to win the 400-meter and 800-meter gold medals in the same Olympics. His time for the 800 was 1 minute 43.50 seconds, a world record. His time for the 400 was 44.26 seconds, the fastest ever at sea level. "I'm no Superman," he said, but few agreed.

Lasse Viren of Finland repeated his 1972 victories in the Olympic 5,000-meter and 10,000-meter titles, the first double double of its kind. The day after the 5,000 final, he ran his first marathon and finished fifth. His training secret, he said, was reindeer milk.

Bruce Jenner of San Jose, Calif., won the Olympic decathlon with a world record of 8,618 points and turned his vibrant personality to show business and commercial endorsements. Edwin Moses of Dayton, Ohio, in his first international meet, won the Olympic 400-meter hurdles in the world-record time of 47.64 seconds. Other world record-breakers during the year were Mac Wilkins of San Jose in the discus throw; Dwight Stones of Huntington Beach, Calif., in the high jump and Dave Roberts of Gainesville, Fla., in the pole vault. Wilkins won in the Olympics, but Stones and Roberts finished third in the race. Four days after his Olympic disappointment, Stones raised his world record to 7 feet 7 1/4 inches.

Roberts regained the pole-vault record in the United States Olympic trials at Eugene, Ore. When Roberts broke his pole, he borrowed one from Earl Bell and cleared 18 feet 8 3/4 inches, breaking Bell's record.

"Were you afraid he would break your record?" Bell was asked. "I was afraid he would break my pole," said Bell.

The best women were Tatyana Kazankina of the Soviet Union and Irena Kirzenstein Szewinska of Poland. Miss Kazankina, who had never taken a major title, won the Olympic 800-meter and 1,500-meter finals and broke world records in both during the year.

When the White Olympic place in Innsbruck, Austria, was given to Canada, continued its boycott so-called amateur hockey on the Soviet Union captured medal, with the Czechoslovak silver and the West German bronze. In the world championships, Poland, in April, C. vaka finished first, the Soviet second and the United States third.

With the emergence of European hockey power, international hockey seemed certain to grow in the near future.

The Games Go On Despite Some Olympian Problems

Alberto Juantorena of Cuba after he won Olympic 400-meter title.

By Neil Amdur

The greatest miracle of the Games of the XXI Olympiad is that they were held. Labor strikes, escalating construction costs and political squabbles were a few obstacles that threw an air of uncertainty around Montreal's role as the host city. As late as one week before the July 17 opening ceremonies, workers were on 24-hour, seven-day shifts trying to finish the $685 million Olympic Stadium while politicians wondered whether the Games would go on, with or without Taiwan and 22 African countries.

Four years earlier, Canadian organizers had promised "games of moderation." Instead, the price tag for two weeks of world attention had soared past $1.5 billion, and many wondered if such an overpowering spectacle was not consumed by its own weight.

Not even weighty political problems, however, could dull the gold-medal brilliance of an 86-pound Rumanian girl, Nadia Comaneci. The 14-year-old gymnast confounded the computers by recording seven perfect scores—there had been none in previous Olympics—and proved unflappable under pressure enroute to three individual gold medals.

It took three days for the world to pronounce Nadia's last name correctly (it's koh-mah-NEECH), longer than the amount of time John Naber spent in the water collecting four gold medals and one silver for the United States. The personable, 6-foot-6-inch Naber was America's dominant Olympic figure, leading the spirited squad of United States men swimmers to 12 victories in 13 events.

Women's swimming also produced a trend—by East Germany, which won 11 of the 13 events. Kornelia Ender was the East German heroine, taking four golds and a silver.

Emotions were intense in men's basketball, where a United States team sought revenge for its disputed last-second loss to the Soviet Union in 1972. There was no rematch, however, as Yugoslavia eliminated the Russians in the semifinals and then succumbed to Adrian Dantley's 30-point effort and a balanced American team, 95-74.

The Star-Spangled Banner was played five times at the Forum to celebrate boxing gold medals by Leon and Mike Spinks. 18-year-old Leo Randolph, Howard Davis and Sugar Ray Leonard. The young American squad won 35 of 41 fights, with only Teofilo Stevenson of Cuba, a two-time Olympic heavyweight champion, stealing a share of the glory.

Alberto Juantorena of Cuba and Lasse Viren of Finland won two individual golds each in track and field. Bruce Jenner, an American, ran away with the two-day decathlon; 355-pound Vasily Alekseyev of the Soviet Union retained the title of world's strongest man, and Juliana Semanova (either 6 feet 11 inches or 7-4, depending on the source) led a Soviet women's basketball team to a gold medal.

The Soviet Union collected the most medals with 125, including 47 gold. East Germany, with 40, doubled its gold-medal total from 1972 and appeared to justify its intense nationalized sports effort. The United States total of 94 medals (34 golds) was the same as in 1972.

But for many athletes, memories of Montreal yielded more sorrow than satisfaction. Taiwan withdrew rather than compromise on what flag or name it would be required to use in the opening ceremonies. At least one continent in the five Olympic rings, Africa, was virtually missing with the 11th-hour withdrawal of black African countries and supporters protesting the presence of New Zealand and the tour of South Africa by a New Zealand rugby team. Their real target was South Africa and its racial policies.

From the outset, after Montreal out-bid Moscow and Los Angeles, Mayor Jean Drapeau had envisioned the Olympics as an extension of Expo '67, part of his dream for Montreal and the pride of Canada. But a succession of strikes delayed various building projects and forced dramatic reassessments. As costs skyrocketed, plans were scaled down.

A total of 94 nations paraded in the opening ceremonies under the best of security in the history of the modern Games. To avoid the turmoil that accompanied the death of 11 Israeli athletes and coaches in Munich, a 16,000-man security force costing $100 million was assembled.

No tragic headlines emerged in Montreal, but some results proved embarrassing. A Soviet pentathlete was disqualified for electrically "bugging" his foil. Five weight lifters, including medalists, were disqualified when their drug-control tests showed they had used banned steroids.

The Russians also dominated the Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, Austria, with 13 golds helped by victories in the biathlon, Nordic skiing, ice dancing and hockey. But the magic names that emerged were Dorothy Hamill, an American figure skater, and Rosi Mittermaier, a West German skier who won two gold medals and a silver.

United States athletes did surprisingly well, with Sheila Young of Detroit winning a speed skating gold medal at 500 meters, a silver at 1,500 and a bronze at 1,000. Peter Mueller took the third American gold, also in speed skating.

The Games Go On Despite Some Olympian Problem

By Neil Andrus

The greatest miracle of the Games of the XXI Olympiad is that they were held. Labor strikes, escalating construction costs and political squabbles were a few obstacles that threw an air of uncertainty around Montreal's role as the host city. As late as one week before the July 17 opening ceremonies, workers were on 24-hour shifts trying to finish the $685 million Olympic Stadium while politicians wondered whether the Games would go on, with or without Taiwan and 22 African countries.

Four years earlier, Canadian organizers had promised "games of moderation." Instead, the price tag for two weeks of world attention had soared past $1.5 billion, and many wondered if such an overpowering spectacle was not consumed by its own weight.

Not even weighty political problems, however, could dull the gold-medal brilliance of an 86-pound Rumanian girl, Nadia Comaneci. The 14-year-old gymnast outscored the computers by recording seven perfect scores—there had been none in previous Olympics—and proved unflappable under pressure en route to three individual gold medals. It took three days for the world to pronounce Nadia's last name correctly (it's kom-ma-NEE-CH), longer than the amount of time John Naber spent in the water collecting four gold medals and one silver for the United States. The personable, 6-foot-6-inch Naber was America's dominant Olympic figure, leading the spirited squad of United States men swimmers to 12 victories in 13 events.

Women's swimming also produced a trend—by East Germany, which won 11 of the 13 events. Kornelia Ender was the East German heroine, taking four golds and a silver.

Emotions were intense in men's basketball, where a United States team sought revenge for its disputed last-second loss to the Soviet Union in 1972. There was no rematch, however, as Yugoslavia eliminated the Russians in the semifinals and then succumbed to

Adrian Dantley's 30-point effort and a balanced American team, 95-74.

The Star-Spangled Banner was played five times at the Forum to celebrate boxing gold medals by Leon and Mike Spinks, 18-year-old Leo Randolph, Howard Davis and Sugar Ray Leonard. The young American squad won 35 of 41 fights, with only Teófilo Stevenson of Cuba, a two-time Olympic heavyweight champion, stealing a share of the glory.

Alberto Juantorena of Cuba and Lasse Viren of Finland won two individual golds each in track and field. Bruce Jenner, an American, ran away with the two-day decathlon; 285-pound Vasily Alexseyev of the Soviet Union retained the title of world's strongest man, and Tulliana Semenova (either 8 feet 11 inches or 7-4, depending on your source) led a Soviet women's basketball team to a gold medal.

The Soviet Union collected the most medals with 125, including 47 gold, East Germany, with 40, doubled its gold-medal total from 1972 and appeared to justify its intense nationalized effort. The United States total of 94

medals (34 golds) was the same as in 1972.

But for many athletes, memories of Montreal yielded more sorrow than satisfaction. Taiwan withdrew rather than compromise on what flag or name it would be required to use in the opening ceremonies. At least one contestant in the five Olympic rings, Africa, was virtually missing with the 11th-hour withdrawal of black African countries and supporters protesting the presence of New Zealand and the tour of South Africa by a New Zealand rugby team. Their real target was South Africa and its racial policies.

From the outset, after Montreal outbid Moscow and Los Angeles, Mayor Jean Drapeau had envisioned the Olympics as an extension of Expo '67, part of his dream for Montreal and the pride of Canada. But a succession of strikes delayed various building projects and forced dramatic reassessments. As costs skyrocketed, plans were scaled down.

A total of 94 nations paraded in the opening ceremonies under the heavy security in the history of the modern Games. To avoid the turmoil companioned the death of 11 Israeli athletes and coaches in Munich, a man security force costing $10 was assembled.

No tragic headlines came from Montreal, but some results pre-empted. A Soviet pentathlete disqualified for electrical cheating in his foil. Five weight lifters, 1 medalists, were disqualified for drug-control tests showed they used banned steroids.

The Russians also dominated Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, with 13 golds helped by victory in the biathlon, Nordic skiing, ice and hockey. But the magic was emerging were Dorothy Hamill, an American figure skater, and Tulliana Semenova, a West German slalom skier. Two Soviet athletes did as well, with Sheila Young winning a speed skating gold at 500 meters, a silver at 1,000 meters and a bronze at 1,500 meters. Peter Muehle, the third American gold, also skating.

Lutz, but the Americans broke back against Montano in the third game and broke him again four games later.

"Our games mesh together," Smith said. "Bob returns well; I may serve harder, but he's quick at the net."

The previous absence of Smith and Lutz from cup doubles had resulted more from chance than personal choice. In 1971 Lutz signed a professional contract with World Championship Tennis, whose players were barred from cup competition at the time. Smith then teamed with Erik Van Dillen for several years.

Smith and Lutz finally regrouped in 1974, but were bypassed in early cup rounds because of schedule conflicts and the feeling that they would not be needed until later matches.

America's Achilles Heel

Yet doubles became America's Achilles heel in the cup and the cause of most criticism directed at the losing captains. In three of the last four years, American teams were beaten in doubles.

"I think this was one of our better matches," Lutz said of the victory before a crowd of 4,000 in warm, sunny weather. "Even though we've played Davis Cup before, it's still nerve-wracking every time you go out there. We really didn't make too many errors."

The United States will next face South Africa in the North American final at Newport Beach, Calif., in mid-April. South Africa has one of the world's top doubles teams in Bob Hewitt and Frew McMillan. The ability of Jimmy Connors, who skipped the Mexican series, to choose, and Smith and Lutz again may dominate much of the pre-match speculation.

Byrne Takes Two-Mile; His First Armory Victory

By WILLIAM J. MILLER

It was the first major schoolboy track meet of the indoor season, but for Kevin Byrne of Erasmus Catholic it was his last race at the 102d Engineers Armory.

The huge, drilled on West 168th Street in Manhattan, across from the Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center, has been a "jinx" place for the senior from New Jersey. In the previous three years, he had won only one individual race there, the 1,000-yard run in the Hayes Games as a sophomore.

For a time yesterday at the 23d annual Bishop Loughlin Games, it appeared that Byrne's lack of success on the flat, armory track—despite outstanding performances elsewhere in his career—would continue. But a tremendous burst of speed on the home stretch of the last lap of the two-mile run wiped out all of his bad memories and carried him to victory in 9 minutes 14.4 seconds.

Chemist and Andrew Jackson tied for the team title with 9 points each. The meet, which ran for 11 hours, drew 3,483 competitors from 180 schools, making it the largest indoor high school track event ever held in this country.

"I wanted this one badly," Byrne said later. "Mike Glynn, my coach, and I have decided to run only seven races indoors after this one and none of them will be here. I just had to leave this place with a smile instead of a grunt," the grinning red-haired senior said.

Byrne was not in the lead throughout most of the 16-lap race and seemed out of it early in the last lap when two Long Island runners, Tom Grimes of North Shore High and John Gregorek of Smithtown's St. Anthony's, the leader most of the race, battled stride-for-stride down the backstretch and round the final turn.

Shift Into High Gear

But at this point, Byrne, coming from six yards back, shifted into high gear; shot past the two struggling leaders on the outside and crossed the finish line three yards ahead of Grimes. The last 440 yards were swift, with Byrne hitting 1:01.3, Grimes 1:02.5 and Gregorek 1:02.5.

It was Gregorek's first running loss since last spring. The St. Anthony's han-for was the sensation of the past cross-country season with an undefeated string of nine races. However, his coach, Don Buckley, was pleased with his third-place time. "His 9:15 is 20 seconds faster than he's ever run so you can hardly be unhappy about that time for a 16-year-old junior," Buckley said.

Grimes completed the circle of happiness that surrounded the first three finishers in the two-mile. "I can't believe I got under 9:20 this early in the season," the 17-year-old senior said. "I upped my weekly running mileage from 50 a week last year to 80 this year and I guess it's paying off."

Tom Camien, the tall, silent type and the last of the Camien Brothers who have starred in track at Sewanhaka High, impressed everyone with his first major victory. The 8-foot-2-inch, 150-pound senior took the lead from East Islip's Norm Ogilvie with three laps remaining and won easily in a meet record 4:17.3, good time for this stage of the season.

He's Not Pleased

Camien, whose brothers, John and Bob, went on to star at Emporia State in Kansas, the school he plans to attend, was nonplussed over his victory in the few words he said after the race. "My coach thought I should have run under 4:10 today," he said, "but I got off lousy and never moved up to quicken the pace."

Jim Fralry, his coach, was more emphatic about his disappointment. "Everything over four minutes for Tom sinks," the coach said. "He has it all going for him: a relaxed running style, good breath control, strong body and legs, but he lacks self-confidence. Once he gets that, he's going to be a great one."

Byrne Will Attend Georgetown

Byrne, a standout since his freshman year, has decided on Georgetown as his college choice. That will disappoint the 99 or so other schools that have sent him recruiting letters. "I narrowed my choice down to three: Georgetown, Villanova and William and Mary," he said. "I decided on Georgetown based on its academic and athletic programs and because its Washington location promises plenty of excitement."

Future Use Golf Clinic er Lopsided to Correct Aiming Without Straining Eyes aiming probably causes more styling golf shots than faulty. weekend player tends to aim his ad to the right of his target, be he mistakenly believes he should his body—shoulders, hips, feet—he target. But when you align ay with the target, the clubhead ill point toward right field.

key to accuracy is to aim the e at the target, then build your off the clubface. In effect, re bringing the target closer, mplies the game.

The best example I know of a spot- almer is Jack Nicklaus, the Professional Golfers' Association player of the year for 1976. Watch Nicklaus' assiduously aim the club and align his body in relation to an intermediate target the next time he's playing in a televised tournament. It's a regimen with him.

He says, "I've found that by following this system carefully, I avoid falling into the habits of misalignment that afflict most golfers."

That is the tallest sort of endorsement for a golf tip.

Michigan, Behind Green, Crushes Kent State Five

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP)—Rickey Green scored 25 points, 20 in the first half and three other Wolverines hit double figures as Michigan easily routed Kent State, 102-66, in a non-conference basketball game today.

Michigan, playing its first game in 12 days, staged two scoring bursts in the first half to post a 52-31 halftime lead, then coasted in the second half as Johnny Orr, the Michigan coach, substituted freely.

Phil Hubbard, center, and Joe Thompson, a reserve forward, each scored 18 points for the Wolverines, 4-0.

Steeler Defense Matched With Colt Offense Today

By GERALD ESKENAZI

When the Colts meet the hottest team in the National Football League today, the Pittsburgh Steelers, will they be seeing dark images of last year's game?

This is the second time in 12 months these teams meet in an American Conference Divisional playoff. Last year the Colts carried the sobriquet of Cinderella. They won their last nine games to make the playoffs.

This year the Steelers had to accomplish that same feat. They did it with style, allowing a total of two touchdowns in those 36 quarters.

All week the Colts have been talking in "ifs." They are reacting like underdogs, which they are. Coach Ted Marchibroda believed 11 Steelers could make the Pro Bowl, and Marchibroda's players hang on his words.

The Colts know they have a weakness—their secondary. And they are worried that this can do them in, especially if the front four has troubles as it did against the last good club it faced—the Cards.

High-Powered Offense

The Colts and Steelers gained many honors this season. The Steelers had the conference's best differential of points-for and points-against. The Colts were second. The Colts led everyone in total offense. The Steelers had the league's best defense.

This game probably will pivot on the Steelers' ability to move the ball along the ground and on their defense to take away the Colts' frightening big play.

The crowd in Baltimore's Memorial Stadium, and those watching over network television (Channel 4 in New York, at 2 P.M.), may know before the game is over which direction the game is going.

The first quarter has been the Colts' poorest. They have averaged only 5 points. In the opening quarter, the Steelers have not given up a touchdown all season.

In the second quarter, Bert Jones and his receivers have broken open the games. In the second quarter the Colts averaged almost 20 points. But the Steelers' opponents averaged only a bit more than 3 points in the second period.

"We have been playing this last part of the season one play at a time," says Andy Russell, the Steeler linebacker.

Two Teams Tied for Lead With 204's in Mixed Golf

MIAMI, Dec. 18—Sandra Post and Tom Watson managed one birdie down the stretch today to gain a tie for the lead with Chi Chi Rodriguez and Joann Washam in the $200,000 Pepsi-Cola mixed team championship at the Doral Country Club.

Miss Post and Watson, who yesterday posted a brilliant nine-under-par 63 in the second round, added a 70 today to enter tomorrow's final round with a 204. Miss Washam and Rodriguez, meanwhile, collected their third straight 68.

The winners of this selected-drive, alternate-shot tournament of the Ladies Professional Golf Association, pairing the top 46 women professionals with male partners, will split a check of $40,000.

Australians in Third Place

Two Australians, Penny Pulz and David Graham, finished with a 70 for a 208 after three rounds. They were in third place, two shots ahead of Silvia Bertolaccini and Jim Colbert, who were fourth.

The first-round leaders, Marlene Hagge and Dr. Gil Morgan, remained at five under par, with a 211, and were in fifth place.

Sandra Palmer and Arnold Palmer, who are not related, carded the best round on this warm and sunny afternoon, a 67 for 213.

Also at 213, along with several other teams, were the pretournament favorites, Judy Rankin and Ben Crenshaw, who recorded a triple-bogey 8 on the 10th hole for the second straight day.

"I've hit the same tree dead solid two straight days; I think I'll slip out tonight with a chain saw and cut it down," mused Crenshaw, the second-leading money winner ($257,759) on the men's tour in 1976.

Early Bogeys for Post-Watson

Both leading teams expressed confidence and figured that a 68 tomorrow, for a 16-under-par 272, would win the tournament.

"If we eliminate our mistakes, we'll be hard to beat," said Watson, the 1975 British Open champion.

"Whenever you're playing well, you're a bit of a confidence. I'll just have to get the ball a little closer for one putt tomorrow," added Watson, referring to Miss Post, his partner.

Miss Post yesterday made six birdie putts, none from closer than five feet, but during today's round three bogeys on the first 11 holes offset three birdies.

"I'm not as much fun today," Miss Post said.

Miss Post and Watson lost the lead on the front nine when Miss Washam and Rodriguez were in the process of collecting four birdies in a five-hole stretch. Then Miss Washam and Rodriguez added birdies at 11 and 12, both times after Rodriguez had hit wedge shots within five feet, to give them a two-shot lead.

A 15-foot birdie putt by Watson at the 608-yard, par-5 12th hole and then a 3-footer by Miss Post at the par-3 15th pulled them within one shot. Then, when Rodriguez and Miss Washam bogeyed the 17th, they were forced to share the third-round lead.

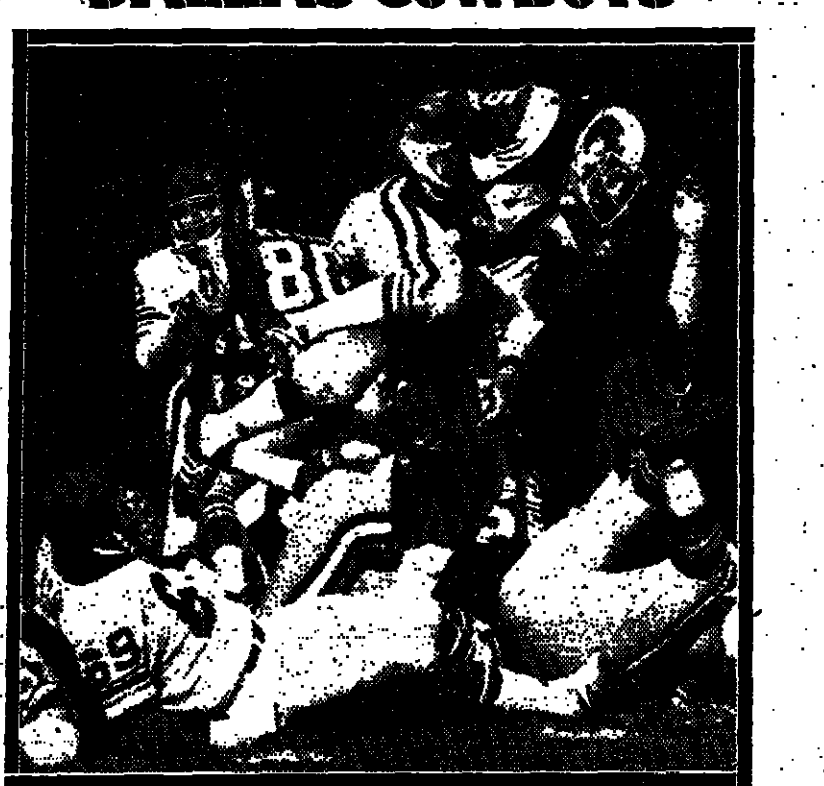

Intangibles Spice Battle In Rams-Cowboys Playoff

IRVING, Tex., Dec. 18—Are the Los Angeles Rams ready for the playoffs? And are the Dallas Cowboys? Both teams presented questions here today as they got set for tomorrow's fourth and last National Football League divisional playoff game in Texas Stadium.

This one will have a late start and CBS anticipates a national television audience of perhaps 30 million. The game will be televised in New York on Channel 2 beginning at 5:30 P.M. E.S.T.

The Rams have a quarterback situation, if not a problem, and so do the Cowboys. Chuck Knox, the Los Angeles coach, is expected to start James Harris, who, in the last year, has been the team's No. 1 or No. 2 quarterback, depending on what day it was. Pat Haden, the most recent No. 1,

Big Gains, Bigger Hopes Spurring Women Athletes

By MARGARET ROACH

This year has brought many concrete gains to women's sports and spurred hopes for further advances. Increased sponsorship has meant the richest tournaments ever in golf, tennis and bowling. Women's squash racquets found its first sponsor, enabling women to compete for prize money for the first time. In both tennis and sports and golf, there were more tournaments with larger purses than ever before, and prize money on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour soared from $1.2 million in 1975 to a record $2.6 million.

Judy Rankin became the first woman on the golf tour to exceed the $100,000 mark in winnings, ending the season with $150,734. Donna Caponi Young and JoAnne Carner also passed $100,000.

In her 13th year of auto racing, Janet Guthrie became the first woman to try to qualify for the Indianapolis 500. She passed her rookie test, becoming the first woman to do so, but did not qualify for the Indy. Instead she went to Charlotte, N.C., and became the first woman to compete against men in a NASCAR Grand National race.

A 10-team women's Professional Softball League was formed and survived its first year, despite predictions that it could not. Each franchise is now planning for next season.

But some of the advancements this year were more subtle. "I think that the Olympics helped the public to focus on women's athletics and bring them to the fore somewhat," said Eva Auchincloss, executive director of the Women's Sports Foundation.

"The effects were at once positive and negative," she continued. "Watching our girls compete and sometimes lose made the public realize that we haven't provided the necessary training and encouragement to make the equal contenders."

Mrs. Auchincloss stressed that this increased consciousness would be a major factor in bringing equality to women's sports.

N. Peg Burke, president of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, saw 1976 as a growth year in college sports. Membership in the association grew from 727 to 793.

"I infer from the rise in our membership," said Dr. Burke, "that an increased number of schools have developed their programs to the point where they want national affiliation. The increase in programs indicated and the dramatic increase in skills that I have witnessed at national championships are thrilling, and we're only beginning to realize what the potential of the female athlete is."

"We have also involved students in governance of the association all the way to the top, and I feel that this is a very big step—for the students to be involved in planning their own programs. Intercollegiate athletics is being looked at in a serious way, and women have been significant in this."

Though Billie Jean King says she doesn't "really look back too much," the founder of the Women's Sports Foundation, co-founder of the softball league, publisher of women's sports magazine and tennis star says she is encouraged by some of the gains in women's sports.

"It's so much better now that women athletes are starting to be accepted," she said. "But people think that things start at the grass-roots level, and I say that's not true. I think things start at the top, when interest, motivation and a role model are created in a sport. That's when the acceptance begins."

She focuses on two key words—attitude and acceptance—when she speaks of the future of women's sports. And Mrs. King has many specific hopes for the future. She says:

"I want to see more pro sports for women, and I'd like to see the sports system create more opportunities, like scholarships, for women athletes to give them a chance to improve within their skilled area. Our sports system should be honest and fair to the people involved."

Janet Guthrie, who passed driver test for Indianapolis 500-mile race.

Operation Sail Is Top Event of '76

By JOANNE A. FISHMAN

This was a year for adventure—and misadventure. It was a time for competition—from the Olympics and the Bermuda Race to the first professional yacht race. It also was a time for growth. Some 1.8 million persons joined the ranks of recreational boating, bringing the total to a record 50.5 million.

But most of all, 1976 will be remembered for Operation Sail. For many of the millions watching on television, the 6 million lining the shores and those aboard the estimated 30,000 pleasure boats in New York Harbor, the euphoria may never be equalled.

The idea, which Frank Braynard, ship historian, pursued in a dingy of office over a fish store until rescued by the Port Authority, spiraled to become the Keystone in the Bicentennial celebration. A spectacle, a happening. It was almost eerie.

For adventure, there was Walter Lewing, a retired stockbroker from Greenwich, Conn., who attempted to circumnavigate the Arctic in a production sloop, only to be turned back by adverse weather. There was Bob Gainer, a 23-year-old sailor from Hillsdale, N.J., who attempted a nonstop circumnavigation, only to have a series of gales snap a headstay and deaden the engine, cutting short his journey after a few weeks.

And there was the Singlehanded Trans-Atlantic Race. Encountering stormy seas from England to Newport, approximately one-third of the 128 starters "retired." Three boats sank. Two skippers were lost at sea and presumed dead.

Meanwhile, on the offshore racing circuit, Williwaw topped the crop of new designs. For those disenchanted with the demands of flat-out racing, Williwaw, a Two-Tonner owned by Seymour Sennett of Metuchen, N.J., symbolized all that was wrong. It was a stripped machine built for the sole purpose of winning under the International Offshore Rule—and it did. As a result, the New York Yacht Club decided to sponsor an unusual racing/cruising class for future level or head-to-head racing.

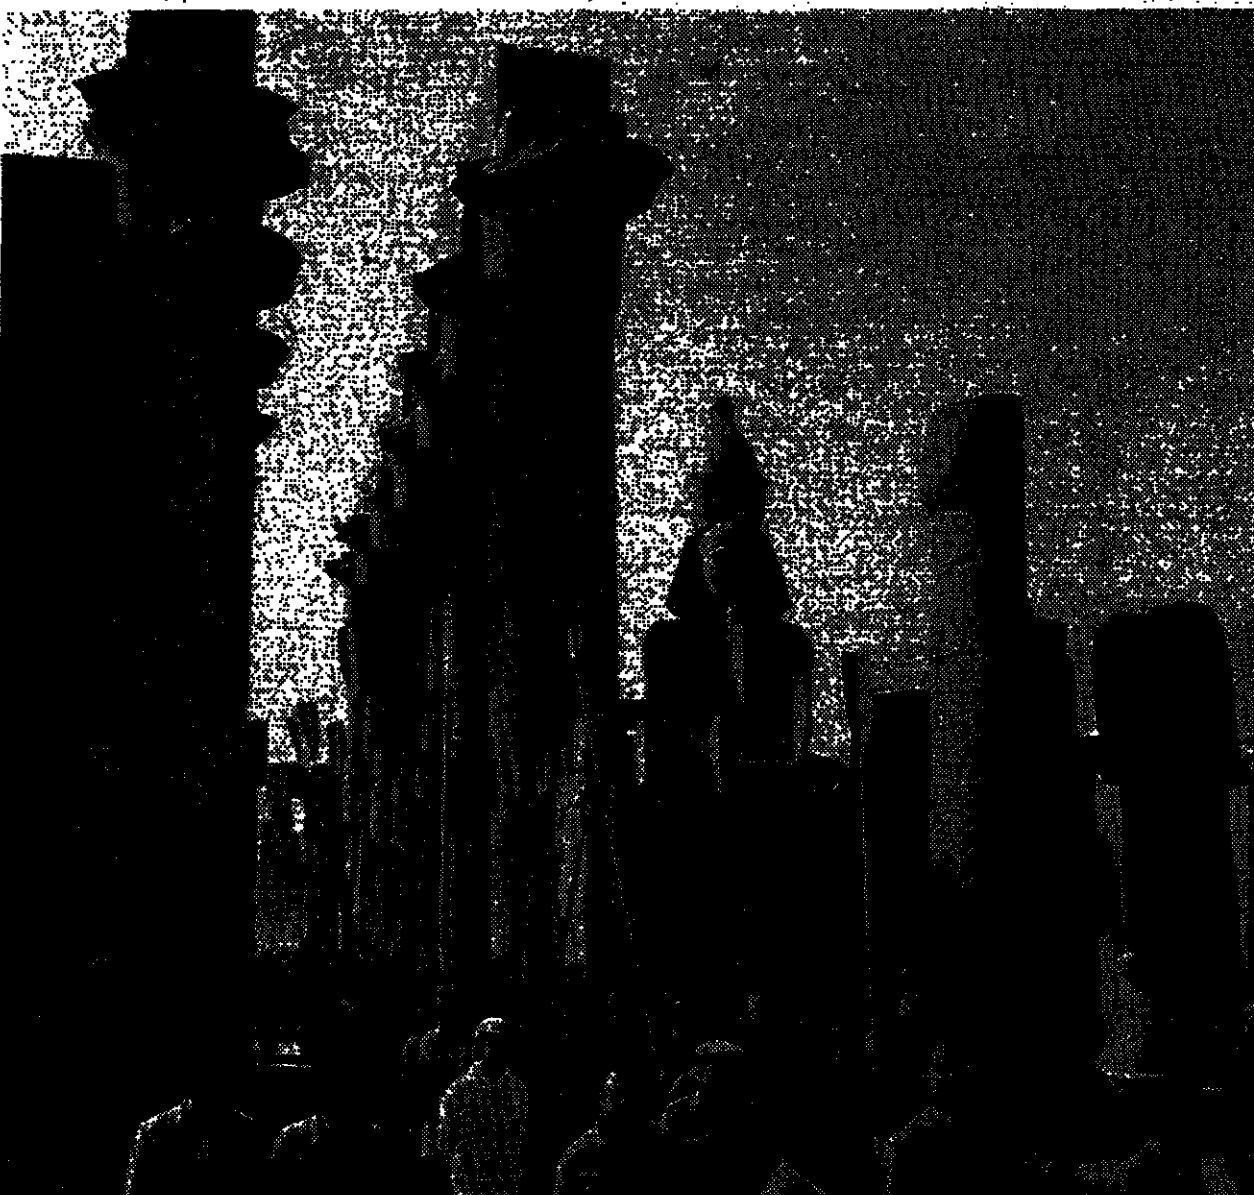

But for most, problems took another tack. There was the continuing squeeze for dock and mooring space, and the increased costs of everything from new boats to maintenance.

Year-end statistics compiled by the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers, a trade organization, show a record $5.3 billion retail was spent on boating, an increase of $5 million over last year.

"We have to be careful not to price boating out of the beginner's market," says Frank Scappon, N.A.E.B.M. administrative vice president.

"But when you include inflation, the 1976 figures don't impress me. Boats and engines averaged a 5 to 10 percent increase in price this year," he continues, "and the increase in persons participating in boating corresponds to the population growth."

The N.A.E.B.M. reports the total number of boats operating on United States waters increased by 365,000 to 10.1 million in 1976.

Nile Rowing to Be Held This Week

By NORMAN HILDESHEIM

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Dec. 18—The sixth annual Nile International Rowing Festival will get under way tomorrow with the arrival of the University of Paris, the French entry.

Harvard University, the United States representative, left Boston today and will reach Cairo Monday after a day's layover in London. On the same flight with Harvard will be the Oxford University's crew, carrying Britain's colors, and Trinity College of Dublin, Ireland's first entry in this rowing extravaganza.

No Regatta in 1973

The festival was first held in 1971, when the Egyptian Rowing Federation, which co-sponsors these events with the Egyptian Ministry of Tourism, invited Oxford and Cambridge to race against Egyptian universities. In 1972, Harvard and Yale were included in the invitation.

There was no regatta in 1973 because of the Israeli conflict, but racing resumed in 1974 with the same Anglo-American participants as in 1972. Last year, the international character of the festival was expanded to include France and Germany, and Harvard became the only United States representative.

The Nile Festival provides the visiting oarsmen with two 2,000-meter races and a week's sightseeing of Egypt's monuments. Until last year, the first race was held in Luxor, Egypt's ancient capital, where the significance of boat racing in Egypt's history is reflected in the wall carvings that decorate the columns and pylons of the temples that line the racing course.

Final Stated in Cairo

Last year, to dramatize the reopening of the Suez Canal, the first race was shifted to Ismailia, the town at the midpoint on the canal. However, the course at Ismailia proved unworkable. Two crews sank in the rough water and the race result was declared void. Despite that experience, Ismailia is again the site of this year's first race.

The final race is always held in Cairo, with Egyptian ministers and ambassadors from the competing countries' crews among the spectators, underscoring the diplomatic as well as the sporting significance of the regatta.

Oxford is the only university to have participated in all the previous regattas. It won the Festival Challenge Cup for the first time last year in an upset of the heavily favored Germans. That victory presaged Oxford's record-breaking triumph over Cambridge last March.

Harvard suffered its only loss of the season here last year. Harvard's coach, Harry Parker, who does not take philosophically to defeat, said last week in the United States that he had chosen the oarsmen for this year's race on the basis of squad seniority. Joining six seniors in Egypt will be four sophomores from last year's undefeated freshman crew, which won the post-season Thames Cup at last summer's Henley Royal Regatta.

New Tournament Slated For Women's Basketball

A new women's college basketball tournament was announced yesterday for four colleges—upstate and five in the metropolitan area. It will be called the Manufacturers Hanover Invitational, and it will conclude Feb. 13 at Iona in New Rochelle, N.Y.

The upstate colleges are Cortland, Ithaca, Syracuse and St. John's Fisher of Rochester. The metropolitan entries are Iona, St. John's, Mercy, Brooklyn College and Queens College. The winning school will receive a $2,000 grant, the runner-up a $1,000 grant.

Wood, Field & Stream: Weather Key to Duck Hunt

By NELSON BRYANT

Special to The New York Times

KILL DEVIL HILLS, N.C.—Planning a one-day duck hunt weeks in advance is a blind date promising only that some sort of an encounter will ensue. Weather is the key to success when waterfowling, and, in general, rainy days with little or no wind are not good for they allow the birds to rest comfortably out of gunshot range on some broad expanse of water.

When Joel Arrington of Raleigh, N.C., and I arrived at the Sea Ranch Hotel the afternoon before our day of hunting the skies were clear, the temperature in the low 40's, the wind almost nonexistent and the forecast for the following day predicted more of the same.

We were not disconsolate, however, for we were greeted warmly by our friends at the Sea Ranch and the evening's tableware was at its usual level of excellence.

The plan for the morning, we learned from the establishment's George Powell, was for Powell and us, to drive 30 miles south along the Outer Banks to Avon before dawn with Billy Gray, an ebullient man of many parts who would then transport us in his 28-foot power boat, The Streaker, three miles out into Pamlico Sound to a so-called still blind.

This was accomplished on schedule and shortly after sunrise we were setting out more than 100 decoys about the blind, a box-like affair, the bottom of which was about eight feet above the water. We had reached the blind in a decoy-laden skiff towed behind The Streaker, the latter drawing too much water for the shallow bar on which the blind was built.

The decoy set, Arrington and I climbed into the blind and the other two retired to the big boat.

To the west of us, about 1,000 yards away, a flock of more than 1,000 Canada geese rested on another bar and the sound of their voices was borne to us on the gentle westerly wind, a wind that slowly pushed away the clouds that had obscured the rising sun. Almost immediately small flocks of buffleheads came to our decoys, the dapper little drakes clearly identifiable from their females at a distance because of the large white patches on their heads.

For more than an hour we held off shooting at them. Buffleheads are good eating but they're only about half the size of a mallard or a black duck and we were hoping for something larger, including widgeon.

By mid-morning, however, the sun poured down out of the cloudless sky and the vast sound, more than 30 miles at its widest, was a gleaming mirror ruffled only occasionally by a vagrant zephyr. Some of the aforementioned geese got up, but did not come near us, a large flock of widgeon wheeled by far out of range and, remembering that Gray had said he would like some ducks in his freezer, we shot eight of the bufflehead before the day was done.

Given proper weather, those who hunt out of the Sea Ranch can expect good shooting and a professional performance from the guides who are directed by Jimmy Curley, a hard-working, friendly young man steeped in the waterfowling tradition.

Blinds vary from those similar to the one I describe to conventional setups in scheduled marshes. The rates charged by the Sea Ranch are among the most reasonable along the East Coast: $125 a day for two hunters includes breakfast, box lunch and supper and a room. The present duck season extends through Jan. 20, and the basic daily limit is five birds. The Canada geese limit is one, but from Dec. 22 to Jan. 20 two-snow geese are allowed. For reservations, one may call (919) 441-7125.

On our way back from the late afternoon we towed in commercial gillnet fishermen's outboard had broken down, been fishing for gray and trout (southern and northern) that had been caught in large in recent weeks in the area. Q also remember, of course, the can be taken on rod and in outer banks surf at this time and in certain years this is of striped bass.

Tying the launch and the late afternoon we lingered by chucking water wading evening's chill with a hot sour mash bourbon before set for home.

The conversation on the n ranged through politics, water women, and at one point I that a trait I deeply appreciate opposite sex was the capacity talk. Perhaps the wind rush open windows affected his lungs my Eastern accent in but Gray, who is something of genius with engines, responds indeed, good torque is everything.

That evening while feverish into a batch of steamed as Sea Ranch had prepared as to dinner, we learned that hunters, many of them in the had done rather well with winged teal, ring-necked d bufflehead. Rain and wind we for the following day, but schedules to meet and go keep.

What They Are Saying

Franco Harris, the Steelers' back, on how Pittsburgh got its playoffs: "After we lost to Cleveland and were 1-4, we didn't couldn't lose another game, we said we wouldn't lose another."

Olya Korbut, the Soviet gymnast, asked if she had bou presents for her fiance during her United States tour, replies t an interpreter: "She says she is a gift for him. What other gi he need?"

Sal Maglie, the former Giant and Dodger pitching star, w a five-hitter to Don Larsen's perfect game in the '56 World, lives in Niagara Falls, N.Y., is 59 years old, unemployed and in cial straits. But he's not bitter. He comments: "The money that get these days doesn't bother me. Let them get all they can, blame them. Baseball is business. The trouble was when I was g they [the owners] had everybody conned. They kept telling t lucky, we were just to be playing."

Pat Peppler, Atlanta Falcon general manager and interim while waiting for Rankin Smith, the team owner, to tell him v he will be rehired or dismissed: "The Lord isn't the only or works in mysterious ways."

Ralph Staub, the new head football coach at the Univ Cincinnati: "I didn't come here just to build over the next few I intend to win next year."

Rod Gilbert, who made three assists as the Rangers inspired hockey in beating the Canadiens, 5-2: "If this is the played for my 1,000th game, I can't wait for my 2,000th."

Bill Walsh, offensive coordinator for the San Diego, C who accepted the head coaching job at Stanford: "Life on and a great campus can be more fulfilling than the stereotyped e of pro football."

Ralston Loses One Post But Remains as Coach

DENVER, Dec. 18 (AP)—John Ralston has relinquished his duties as general manager of the Denver Broncos to Fred Gebhart, but Ralston will remain as head coach. Gerald Phipps, owner of the National Football League team, announced today. Gebhart, who has been with the Broncos since 1965, currently is assistant general manager.

Phipps in announcing the staff changes at a news conference, said he felt "that a separation of duties will enable John to devote his total time and efforts toward continuing the improvement of our football team on the field."

Ralston led Denver to a 9-5 won-lost record this season—the best in the team's 17-year history. But disgruntled fans had called for Ralston's dismissal because of his failure to deliver the playoff team he had promised. Ralston had a 34-33-3 record at Denver and he has led the Broncos to all three of their winning seasons.

Lease-Rental Guide

The Avis
Escape Clause Lease.

The long-term lease that lets you out anytime after the first 90 days.

We're so sure we can offer you a deal you'll want to stay with, we've made it easy for you to change your mind. If, after the first 3 months, you want to cancel any Avis net finance lease, just give us thirty days notice. Avis will end your lease and sell you the car at a price agreed to in advance.

Introducing
240 Diesel.
The Mercedes-Benz idea of basic transportation.

Just as the Mercedes-Benz philosophy is different, so is the 240D. It gives you reliable Diesel power. You choose either a 4-speed manual or a 4-speed automatic transmission. Standard equipment includes 4-wheel independent suspension, 4-wheel disc brakes. A dramatic new body design incorporates over 100 safety elements.

Test drive the new 240D: basic transportation has never been so sophisticated.

Sips and Downs of Fly-Drive

ROLAND GELATT
a compulsive fly-drive freak—one so hopelessly hooked that he as the Atlantic several times each just to spin off for a week into as yet unexplored portion of the European hinterland. For around $500 at this time of year one can get inclusive fly-drive packages to Europe that provide round-trip fare on regularly scheduled flights, a small car with unlimited mileage for seven days and accommodations for one night in a good hotel at the gateway city. Admittedly, it's a long way to go for a week of motorized wandering, but I can think of nothing more satisfying to body and soul than to travel the provincial roads of France or Italy or Spain in the offseason, with the green and red Michelin guides pointing the way to seduc-tive sights, choice restaurants and quiet hotels.

In fact, my wife and I are just back from such a trip—to southern Spain this time—and I come armed with concrete specifics of how such a trip works out. But before I begin, and before you sign up, let a veteran fly-driver offer some general words of advice.
Fly-drive brochures understandably stress the lowest possible price, which is based on the use of a so-called Group A car. For a very few more dollars you can reserve a Group B or Group C car instead. Do so by all means. The small additional outlay not only buys more leg room and general comfort but also a more powerful engine—essential for negotiating hilly roads without excessive shifting and for darting quickly around slow-moving trucks. Automatic shift cars are also available, but these command a considerably higher supplementary charge and consume rather alarming quantities of expensive European gasoline. Whichever car category you decide on, be sure to specify it when booking a fly-drive; otherwise you'll end up with one of those mini-mini Group A jobs.

If the fly-drive package includes hotel accommodations in the gateway city for one night (most of them do), specify that you want the room for the last night, not the first. This request should also be made at the time of booking your ticket. Jet flights to Europe arrive early in the morning, and there's no point in driving straight into town—and to a hotel where your room may not be ready for several hours. Thus you should avoid the big city altogether that first morning. You will, however, want to be within easy striking distance of the airport at the end of your trip; so you should reserve your "free" hotel room for the final night. Departure time for the return flight will be around noon, give or take an hour, the next day—but remember to clock in the car no later than when you clocked out a week earlier; otherwise you can be charged for an additional day's rental.

Before you leave home, get a detailed, up-to-date road map and work out your general itinerary in advance.
Unless you're accustomed to a regime of two hours' sleep at night, make your first day's drive short and unstrains-ous. If possible, route yourself away from your arrival city and from the inevitable morning traffic jams. Air-

Highs and Lows of a California
Wine Tour

The author drove himself to drink—in five of the seven wineries he visited on a self-guided tour of the Napa Valley
along the way.

By ALAN LEVY

The Gray Line of San Francisco offers a tour of the Napa Valley Wine Country, but Gray Line was on strike. So we rented a car and, armed with a free guidebook to "California's Wine Wonderland" from the Wine Institute, we did it ourselves: seven wineries in nine hours, with tastings at five of them, all of which took some doing, some driving and some drinking.
At 8:45 A.M., in one of San Francisco's peacop-for-breakfast fogs, my wife, two daughters and I crossed the Golden Gate Bridge and sped along the Redwood Highway (Route 101) for 20 miles of improving visibility before swerving onto Route 37 (Valley of the Moon Scenic Route) and crossing the Petaling River. We could have followed 37 until just past Vallejo, where it joins the main winery artery of the Napa Valley—California Route 29—but, instead, near the Sears Point Raceway, we veered left onto Route
121 to Sonoma.
We made our pilgrimage to Sonoma because I wanted to begin our tour of California's wine industry somewhere near the beginning of its history—and Sonoma houses two major landmarks.
The first, to which we merely nodded in passing, was San Francisco Solano (1824), northernmost of a chain of 21 missions where the Franciscan friars made wine for sacramental purposes, self-nourishment and hospitality to wayfarers. The second, two miles out of town on Old Winery Road—in a setting of walnut and eucalyptus trees —was the Haraszthy Cellar of the Buena Vista Winery.
Count Agoston Haraszthy (1812-69), a colonel and onetime bodyguard to the Austro-Hungarian Emperor Francis I, was a Hungarian nationalist who rebelled in the 1840's and fled to the New World. Back in Hungary, his vineyards were confiscated and he was sentenced to death in absentia. He arrived in New York in 1843 and made his way west. Recognizing the rich, consistent Sonoma soil and sun as even more ideal for grape-growing than his native continent's, he bought what is now the Buena Vista property and persuaded the Governor of Cali-of Europe; there would be no fee, but expenses would be reimbursed. In 1862, Haraszthy returned to California with some 100,000 cuttings from 300 classic Old World wine-grape varieties, some of which, transplanted, did indeed grow grapes far finer than their noble forebears.

("Actually," says director Ernest G.
Mittelberger of the Wine Museum of San Francisco, "the unknown father of the California wine industry was Jean Louis Vignes, a native of Bordeaux, who was the first to import vines from Europe to California 30 years ahead of Haraszthy. In 1831, Vignes planted 104 acres in Los Angeles with French vines.")
The California Legislature reneged on the Governor's agreement and refused to pay Haraszthy's $12,000 expense account.irate and frustrated, the Count moved south in quest of new fortune—but, crossing a stream in Nicaragua in 1869, he fell into the water and was eaten by alligators.
His sons, Arpad and Attila, carried on the Buena Vista Vineyards, which prospered in their hands and again, many years later, under the ownership of Frank Bartholomew of United Press International. Buena Vista is now owned by a Southern California liquor wholesaler.

I parked the car in a picnic area ("for retail sales patrons only") outside the vine-covered original stone 1857 winery and we strolled through the adjacent Haraszthy Cellar of walls and tunnels carved out of solid limestone by Chinese laborers. An informative self-guided tour—photos and text mounted on wine barrels—led us to the tasting room. This was a handsome bar where little sips of wine were free, but everything else was for sale:
old labels a nickel, picture postcards
a dime, bottle Buena Vista and grape-shaped Christmas-tree lights for considerably more.
My wife and I had elected to sample Count Haraszthy's two most interesting wines: fruity red Zinfandel, a California grape that blossomed from his Old World cuttings and became an American favorite, and Green Hungarian, a semi-dry white wine that nobody in Hungary has been able to trace. A bartender named Norm poured four sips into wine glasses. My wife and I toasted the putative Father of California Wine and his son, but the Zinfandel tasted as if it had been in the bottle a little too long.
Before I could point this out to Norm, he spotted my wife doing what most parents do in Europe, where we live: offering a sip from her glass to our older daughter Monica, 12. "No, ma'am," Norm said firmly. "We got liquor laws here in California and she can't drink under 21." Then he turned to Monica and added with a courtly twinkle: "She may be 19 or 20, but she's not 21."
Monica laughed at what is still a compliment to her and forgot about the wine. When my wife and I sampled our Green Hungarian, it was not quite cold and had a rather acid aftertaste. "Is it supposed to have a bite to it?" I asked our genial host. Norm poured himself a shot of Green Hungarian, drank it down, puckered and said: "I don't detect any bite."
A little before 10:30 A.M., our family set out for Napa County and the

Notes: Doubts Over Duty-Free Bargains

ROBERT J. DUNPHY

Shannon Airport is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year. It is the site of the world's first duty-free shop—but it's holding the day party amid mounting suspicion that airport duty-free shops are what they used to be.

The pioneer in the field, the Shannon shop, was the forerunner of scores of similar outlets in airport terminals about the world. And today its sales are down to 20,000 items, and the counter sales of $10 million are topped only by the duty-free "shopping center" at Amsterdam's Schiphol Airport, with 51 departments selling everything from diamonds to automobiles and with sales totaling $100 million a year.

The shop at Shannon also does a thriving mail-order business. In the United States through catalogue sales, it sells each year more than 175,000 catalogues at $1 each (refundable with any purchase) to American customers, and mail-order sales in the first nine months of this year totaled $2,620,000, according to the latest count, according to the European Travel Commission; there are 51 duty-free shops at airports in 15 countries on the Continent and others operating on ferries.

Excursion vessels plying the English Channel, the North Sea, the Mediterranean and other waterways—outlets of duty-free goods are scattered throughout the United States, South America and the Far East.

Even as sales rise and new outlets continue to mushroom around the world, new facilities are scheduled to open in Rome, and, for example, complaints about duty-free shopping have become a major issue of the European Community, with the European Commission, the monthly magazine of the Community, carrying an article entitled, "How Durable Is Duty-Free?"

Duty-free items should be cheaper than their equivalents at a shop down the street, but that is not always true, the magazine said. "In Germany, the Netherlands and France, brands of expensive French perfumes are cheaper in the city than at the airport duty-free shop.

"One ounce of Chanel No. 5 costs $29 at Frankfurt Airport, but you can buy it downtown for $21.50. In the duty-free shop at Tokyo, the same bottle would cost $35; in the shop at Sydney, Australia, $32; in Johannesburg, South Africa, $20; in London, $28; in Paris, $31 ($20 on the rue de la Paix).

Herbert Diehl, of West Germany's Heindemann Brothers, a major supplier of duty-free stores, is one of the industry leaders who are worried about the future. In a recent issue of "International Tax-Free Trader," the industry organ published in London, Mr. Diehl cited the explosive growth of duty-free outlets in recent years but added that a real danger lay in the fact that airport authorities were trying "to maximize their revenues only through excessive royalties from their concessionaires."

Another industry spokesman, A. E. Merlino, president of the International Association of Airport Duty-Free Stores, representing 44 airport shops in the United States, Canada and South America, was equally concerned. "When we operators put the words 'duty-free' over our portals, we have made the solemn promise that a qualified traveler can confidently buy the products presented at a substantial or even dramatically lower price than he can in most tax-paid markets. In many cases, we are allowing ourselves to carry merchandise that does not offer a substantial savings, and if airport authorities continue to raise our rents and merchandise prices, we will be forced to raise prices, they will inevitably price us out of the market and kill the golden goose."

Despite the outcry from members of the industry and travelers, the concept of duty-free shopping appears to be here to stay. Even the most vociferous of the complainants agree that there are still bargains to be had by the discriminating shopper, particularly in heavily taxed lines, such as liquor and cigarettes.

YULE TRAVEL GIFTS

The American Society of Travel Agents, 7,500 members strong, is offering the public a chance to give the whole world for a Christmas present.

Mark Brammator Jr.

A.S.T.A.'s annual Christmas Gift Certificate Program is going into its second year, and with the approach of the holiday season, travel agents across the country are ordering the forms in bulk and promoting travel certificates as the perfect stocking-stuffer for last-minute shoppers at Christmas.

The A.S.T.A. certificates come in two sizes—diploma size and passport size—and can be made out in denominations ranging from a few dollars up into the thousands, as long as the money is deposited in advance with the travel agent.

WASHINGTON'S CROSSING

One of the most dramatic events of the Revolutionary War, Washington's crossing of the Delaware on Christmas, 1776, will be re-enacted with particular panache this year to mark the Bicentennial of America's independence. The event will take place at Washington's Crossing State Park in Pennsylvania, about five miles south of New Hope, and a record turnout is expected to be on hand for the proceedings. The actual crossing of the river will take place at 2 P.M. on Christmas Day, but the attendant festivities will begin an hour earlier, with marching bands and martial music. As he has for the past 24 years, St. John Terrell, the actor who initiated the annual Christmas Day re-enactments 24 years ago, will again play his favorite role and brave the wintry winds as George Washington, standing in the prow of one of the four Durham boats that will make the crossing. Washington actually crossed the icy river during the night of Dec. 25-26 to march on Trenton and surprise the carousing Hessian troops. Spectators will be able to view the afternoon re-enactment from either the Pennsylvania or New Jersey banks of the Delaware, but the official ceremonies will take place on the Pennsylvania side between the Old Ferry Inn and the Memorial Building. E. Wilmer Fisher, the park superintendent who is directing the re-enactment, announced that the boats will make two crossings to permit New Jerseyans to participate in the celebration. The documentary film, "Washington Crossing the Delaware," will be shown in the Memorial Building at 1 o'clock. On the Jersey side of the river, the "Festival of the Ten Crucial Days," the Garden State's salute to Washington's historic crossing, and the Battles of Trenton and Princeton, will get under way on Christmas Day, with performances of operas, concerts, ballets and choral works that will continue through Jan. 3.

AMTRAK HIKES FLORIDA FARES

Amtrak, the national railway passenger corporation, has increased its service on its New York-Florida runs for the holiday season and hiked its fares on the route an average of 3 to 3½ percent. The expanded service will provide more capacity on the trains and give travelers additional options to choose from in planning their trips south, Amtrak said.

Letters: An Excess Of Auld Lang Syne?

To the Editor:

Three New Year's Eves, count them, three. A mind-boggling idea, available on Dec. 31, 1976, for the first time in the history of the world. And for only $4,850. Count me in. I have just read the story of this incredible trip (Travel Notes, Nov. 14). Participants will fly aboard the Air France Concorde to Paris on Dec. 29, celebrate the first New Year's Eve there, board the Concorde, and flying against time, celebrate New Year's No. 2 over the Atlantic—and arrive in Washington in plenty of time to celebrate New Year's No. 3. Now that is really something.

Come to think of it, just reading about it has quite exhausted me. And a night at a Parisian cabaret is included? How about B-12 shots? Would you suggest that I rest during the day? But what about shopping or sightseeing during my short stay in Paris?

Now about packing, should I wear the same dress to all three parties? Naturally it would be with the same people, so I suppose a change would be nice. Is there room to change clothes on the Concorde? Will there be time for it in Washington? What if something is spilled on me at one of the parties? I guess I should be prepared. Hang a drip-dry in the aisle?

I love parties. All that good food and drink. Champagne and shrimp, vodka and caviar, scotch and cheese dip. But my stomach can only take so much. Three sessions of it would make "Lost Weekend" seem like a tea party. I doubt if I could handle it. I suppose I could have just one drink and lots of food at the Paris midnight. Maybe a little champagne on the supersonic return, and coffee in Washington. But no, that one will be at the French Embassy, and I know the temptations of a French buffet table. Might there be a stomach pump on hand for use between gourmet gatherings? No one can resist all that food and drink.

Did I say free? Wrong. I have already paid $4,850 for it all, haven't I? Let's see how that works out. Round-trip air fare, $1,890. Hotels in Paris and Washington, $200 is generous. As for food, with breakfast included in the hotel bill, it would be hard to spend over $100 a day, those evening parties and all, so $200 should more than cover it. Cabaret visit, maybe $50. Parties in Paris and at French Embassy in Washington, $200 is plenty. Total, $2,340. What did the other $2,510 buy? The unique opportunity to have three New Year's Eves in one day. Something to talk about for years.

On second thought, maybe you'd better cancel my reservation. I think I will just have a bit of the bubbly in front of my television set. Times Square, Guy Lombardo, and all, then to bed. After all, it is traditional, and I won't have to diet away the gastronomic overindulgences, or nurse the monumental hangover. And I've got my $4,850 to keep me warm.

Maybe one New Year's Eve for three days would be better instead of—well, probably not.

AMY D. BENNETT

HAPPY ENDING

To the Editor:

Last March, my son and I took a Swissair packaged ski-vacation to Chamionix, France. The package included round trip air fare between New York and Geneva, transfer fees from the airport to Chamionix, a double hotel room and Continental breakfasts for a week.

At the end of our stay, the hotel clerk presented me with a bill for over $150 covering items which, he said, were not included in the package. Among them: two one-week lift passes, bus passes and meals and beverages taken at the hotel. Although I looked over the invoice, the unfamiliar symbols and arrangements defied interpretation. Assuming that all was in order, I paid the bill—and forgot about it.

Two weeks ago a call came in from Heinz Bronnmann of Swissair in New York. "We've been checking the records," he told me, "and we believe that you were overcharged by the hotel in Chamionix. Could you send us a copy of the hotel invoice?"

Fortunately, the invoice had been saved. Ten days later a refund check for $115 came in. Also enclosed were ski brochures and the hope that we would choose Swissair again for our next trip. He can be assured we will.

What's Doing in the VIRGIN ISLANDS

DONALD WALKER

GROUND—St. Thomas, St. John and St. John are the principal islands of the United States Virgin Islands. British Virgin Islands are also known as the "BVI's." For example, with its 32 miles, it is about the same size as Manhattan. The three islands go back to backwater. Most of the action is on St. Thomas; St. John, although larger, is more lush; St. John, the smallest, is for those who want no crowds. Many St. Thomas residents go to St. John for just reason. There are about 100 inhabitants, split almost equally between St. Thomas and St. John, other than about 2,500 St. John. The population is cosmopolitan. In the major Puerto Rican, some East Indian and a growing white (and a group called "Continental") the American mainland. The United States bought the Virgin Islands from Denmark in 1917 for $25 million. They are an unincorporated territory under the American flag.

ATE—The trade winds blow across the Virgin Islands and produce an "eternal summer" and a temperature of 75 degrees. The daytime December temperature is in the 80's, average yearly rainfall is 40 inches, but showers usually last no more than about 10 minutes. And a hurricane has not hit in 30 years. For all that, residents detect a definite "off" season and many simply swim in December. January, February, "Too cold," they say. Vacationers from the mainland think otherwise.

ING AROUND—If you stay in St. Thomas—as most Virgin Islanders do—it is easy to get to St. John and St. John. St. John is to "fly the Goose," the twin-engine amphibious plane operated by Antilles Air, which describes itself as the "last seaplane line in the world." The flight takes 20 minutes, costs $25 round trip. The alternative is to fly from the regular jets on each island, which are tied several miles out to sea. "Goose," by the way, offers most scenic flight between the Virgin Islands and San Juan, Puerto Rico, 80 miles and 45 minutes, because it flies lower than commercial aircraft, thus affords more dramatic views of the islands and waters. St. John, five miles from St. Thomas, is mostly United States National Park, and beauty of its primitive vegetation, mill ruins and a spectacular underwater trail at Trunk Bay (where sunken blocks in 10-20 feet of clear water, city indigenous fish and coral lie snorkeler on the surface), not be matched elsewhere in the Virgin Islands. Cruz Bay, the town, is easily reached by boat that leave Red Hook, St. Thomas, every hour; the fare is each way. The "Goose" also to St. John, but a more interesting way to go from downtown St. John is on the catamaran "Ho Tel," which charges $10 for children for an all-cruise. Bring your camera. Keling gear is available free at the "Ho Tel" once it reaches Sycamore Beach on St. John.

RENT—Rent a car or Jeep, a van, a National, Econo-Car, or take a taxi (on St. John, airport to Charlotte Amalie, $2). There is no service on St. Thomas and St. John (50 cents a day). Motorcycles are also available to rent, starting at $7 a day but it's easy to walk almost everywhere in Charlotte Amalie or St. John. If you do rent a car, start at about $20 a day—number: driving is on the left. St. John will give you 90-day in island license; the rental companies supply them, on premises.

SHOPPING—The islands' stores are dependent upon day-trip tourists from Puerto Rico fly over (in half an hour) duty-free purchases, primarily, and also upon cruise-ship shoppers who put in short stops. The visitors from Puerto Rico find that in making the "see run" they can make up the air fare in savings. St. John's narrow Main Street (real street from Danish times; the main street is called the "Main Street") with one shop after another devoted to St. John's specialties for liquor, watches, eras, linen, china, radios, tape recorders and cigarettes, has some of the best shopping in the Caribbean. When four or five ships are docked for the Main Street looks like Herald is at noon. The Territorial Government announced last month that 470 cruise ships would call at St. Thomas and 35 at St. John. On Jan. 12, nine cruise ships, with a total passenger capacity of 5,432, are scheduled to call at St. Thomas—the heaviest day of the winter schedule. Because adults can take five bottles of liquor back to the United States mainland duty-free, check-in counters at airports in the islands tend to be swamped with liquor cartons. A tip: Carry your liquor. Don't check it through as baggage. It might break. As for best buys, check the local newspapers for the week's specials. Some supermarkets, and even the local F. W. Woolworth's often advertise such low leaders as Virgin Islands rum at 79 cents a fifth, top brand Scotch at about $2 a gallon for 99 cents. Occasionally, a liquor-price war breaks out among the stores in St. Thomas—as it did last month—and prices drop even more. But gone are the days when cameras and electronic equipment were real bargains in the Virgin Islands; often, Nikon and Leica cameras and Pioneer and Sony hi-fi components can be bought for less in New York City, although the 3 percent sales tax there sometimes even things out. Still, Wedgwood china, perfumes, linen, Swiss watches and cigarettes are good buys. Americans are allowed to bring $200 in duty-free purchases back with them.

OLD WALKER is a Times writer based in St. Thomas.

SAFETY—Once called by some "the Fire Island of the Caribbean," an allusion to the offbeat, bohemian life-style enjoyed by many, St. Thomas is still a casual place. The island used to have a considerable night life downtown, but things are quieter now; Main Street is almost deserted at 9:30 P.M. (although the biggest hotels still swing at night). Some of this—but only some—has to do with a fear of crime. But there is no wholesale apprehension here, and American Cantonese chicken, at $3.75, is especially recommended. For West Indian fish, try Daddy's Restaurant near Red Hook—well worth the 20-minute trip from town. Recommended on St. John is Club Comanche, on the Christiansted waterfront, where the dinner menu generally runs $6-$9. The curries are always good there, as is native fish. Good fish can also be obtained at a new restaurant, The Eccentric Egret, in Christiansted.

DRINKING—St. Thomas is rich in bars. If you really want to touch base with the locals, have a post-5 P.M. drink (about 50 cents) at the Bar Normandie in French Town. At the most popular watering hole for local notables, Sparky's Saloon on the waterfront, mixed drinks go for about $1 to $1.25. In St. John, Club Comanche has been a popular meeting spot for many years. Another lively hangout is the wharfside bar of the King Christian Hotel.

NIGHT LIFE—St. Thomas still has several downtown discotheques and bars that feature folk and rock singers, but, as opposed to earlier years, the action has now shifted to the resort hotels out of town near the beaches. The social center for local residents is the 330-room Frenchman's Reef Holiday Inn, where singers, pianists and even an occasional ventriloquist from the States perform. There is dancing there, at Bluebeard's Castle Hotel, at the beach of small hotels which occasionally feature limbo dancers and calypso singers. The activities desk at the larger hotels is the best place to check on the changing entertainment scene.

HOTELS—The sprawling Frenchman's Reef Holiday Inn on St. Thomas has winter rates of $65-$99 a double, $105-$135 a triple, $155-$190 a day per person for modified American plan. An excellent hotel choice—but not on the beach 6330. St. John also boasts the understatedly elegant Caneel Bay Plantation, whose guests have included Henry Kissinger, Vice President-elect Walter Mondale (who flew down just after the November elections) and a great many other world figures. Its winter rates range from $155 to $175 a day for two, breakfast and dinner included. Off-season rates are much cheaper, especially in the summer. A visit to St. John should include a taxi or rented car tour of the island ($15 for three persons in an American-made cab), stopping off atop Boderax Mountain to look down on Coral Bay and on Tortola in the British Virgin Islands. When waiting at Cruz Bay to catch the boat back to St. Thomas, stop at Mooie's Bar and relish the view of the wharf area.

ST. CROIX—Many Crucians, as St. Croix residents are called, feel they have been shortchanged by St. Thomas, the seat of government, which gets most of the cruise-ship business in the Virgin Islands and the day-trippers from Puerto Rico. However, they can be proud of their island's peaceful charm and the fact that the Danish-style town of Christiansted is more attractive, cleaner and more "browsable" than Charlotte Amalie. An easy walking tour in Christiansted can take in Government House (there is a companion structure and the official residence of the Governor, on St. Thomas), the Steeple Building (which houses the Museum of Indian Relics), the Old Customs House (now the St. Croix Library) and the Episcopal Church, one of the oldest churches in the West Indies. St. Croix's economic base is more diversified, too, as host to Hess Oil and Martin-Marietta Aluminum plants.

COMING EVENTS—The major attractions are always Carnival in St. Thomas (in April) and the St. Croix Christmas Festival, a two-week celebration of calypso contests, parades, horse races and street dancing. The festival starts just before Christmas and continues until Jan. 6, Three Kings Day (a traditional Puerto Rican holiday). Puerto Ricans may comprise almost half the population of St. Croix. Check the local newspaper and the tourist publications for other festivities.

WATER SPORTS—On St. Thomas, the clearest water, especially for snorkeling and scuba diving, is at Coki Point (25 cents per adult for admission; no lifeguards; no facilities for changing—but a food stand that makes good meat patties, especially when the fried chicken legs at low prices). The best beach, all things considered, is at Sapphire Bay, which is primarily the location of a condominium-resort hotel complex (all beaches in the Virgin Islands are public, by law). Few of the beaches have lifeguards, extensive parking or changing facilities; an exception is Magen Bay, one of the most spectacularly beautiful in the Caribbean, especially when seen from atop a mountain. The water, however, is not really that clear. St. John's beaches are even better on almost all counts, especially at Trunk Bay ($3.25 by taxi from Cruz Bay). Snorkeling there, at the Underwater Trail, is excellent, and a National Park Service lifeguard is always on duty. There are changing and showering facilities at Trunk Bay, plus picnic tables and a small food concession (primarily hamburgers and other sandwiches). Buck Island, off St. Croix, which also has an underwater trail, is well worth the trip by small boat from the Christiansted, St. Thomas and St. John and the neighboring British Virgin Islands. Bare-boat charters start at about $600 a week in the winter season, and at about 20 percent less in summer. So extensive is the listing of all the boat and water-sports activities that the Division of Tourism offices put out a special brochure to cover it all, plus information on golf (mainly on St. Croix) and tennis.

GETTING THERE—Unless you're on a cruise ship, you get to St. Thomas or St. John by flying Eastern or American Airlines direct, or by connecting in San Juan for either island (the cost is about the same). The direct American and Eastern jet flights from New York to St. Thomas (in about three-and-a-half hours) are $210.80 round trip on weekdays and $233.80 on weekends. St. Croix has an advanced international airport capable of handling large jets. St. Thomas's Harry S. Truman Airport is marginal (37 persons were killed there in a 1968 American Airlines jet crashed while landing in April), but efforts are being pushed ahead to extend the runway, remove part of a hill in front of it and generally upgrade other facilities.

tourists should rid themselves of the often irrational fear that they are not "safe" in the Virgin Islands. St. Croix has largely put behind the trauma of the 1972 Fountain Valley Golf Club massacre that saw eight persons senselessly murdered—an episode that apparently had racial overtones but which, in a larger perspective, did not indicate a trend toward violence as a political instrument in the Virgin Islands. The Virgin Islands, like so many developing societies, are undergoing some overdue social changes, but random violence is not among them.

DINING—Many leading St. Thomas restaurants serve daily luncheon specials at about $2.50, that are bargains. In downtown Charlotte Amalie—but hidden in an alleyway, the Royal Dame Mall—is L'Escarrot, where the $2.50 special at lunch might well be grouper (a local fish) in butter sauce or a typical French dish. L'Escarrot, elegantly set in an old, restored Danish warehouse, is perhaps the most popular meeting place at lunch—it serves only lunch—for St. Thomas's power elite. Other recommended luncheon specials in the same price range are those at Andy's No. 1 Club (try the roast goat, then the carrot cake for dessert), at the Hotel 1829, and at the enormous buffet—including such West Indian dishes as conch (pig's feet with lime and peppers) and johnnycake (fried cake)—at Frenchman's Reef Holiday Inn, which is $2.95 and probably the best luncheon buy in St. Thomas. For a quieter, L'Escarrot's other branch, at the submarine base just out of town, is recommended, as is Au Bon Vivant, where the champagne ($23 for two) and the steak au poivre ($9.95) are specialties. Both places, there is a more than adequate wine selection. There are many other Italian, Mexican, Continental and West Indian restaurants, and if you can't do without Chinese food once a week, try the Kum Wah, where the is Bluebeard's Castle Hotel, which overlooks the town and harbor of Charlotte Amalie. Rates are $65-$110 double, European plan. A good guest house with a view of the town, is Gallean House, at $30-$36 double, with continental breakfast. Increasingly, knowledgeable visitors are renting condominiums not being used by absentee owners. Among the best, and on good beaches, are those at Cowpet Bay and Sapphire Bay. Fine hotels on St. Croix include St. Croix by the Sea (European plan, $65 a double), the Buccaneer ($50-$110 double, European plan), and Grapevine Beach ($65-$80 double, European plan). Modified American plan can be had for about $15 a day per person. Rates at all hotels can be obtained at the United States Virgin Islands Division of Tourism offices in New York (10 Rockefeller Plaza, 10020), Chicago, Miami, Washington, San Juan or in Charlotte Amalie, St. Thomas, V.I. 40001. Or, on arriving in St. John, head for the Hospitality Lounge in the Grand Hotel, facing Emancipation Park. All kinds of free tourism literature is available there.

ST. JOHN—Nothing much happens in St. John and most people want to keep it that way. The best vacation buy by far in the Virgin Islands is a rental of equipped tent or cabin at lovely Cinamon Bay, which also has a commissary and other accommodations on the beach. You can turn up at Cinamon Bay ($4 by taxi from Cruz Bay, where a ferry from St. Thomas arrives) with no equipment, food or other provisions, then rent a tent and cooking utensils and buy your food at the commissary. The tents rent for $9 a day for two persons; the equipped cottages are $15.50; bare sites cost $3. For reservations, which are essential, write, Cinamon Bay Camp, Box 120, St. John, United States Virgin Islands 00630, or telephone (by direct distance dialing from the States) at 809-776-

If You Go...

... to the Napa Valley wine country, and the Gray Line of San Francisco is working, its nine-hour Tour No. 6 leaves First and Mission Streets at 9 A.M. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays from March 1 through Nov. 15 only. The tour includes a visit to one winery, either the Hurd Beeswax Candle Factory or the Vintage 1870 wine boutique, as well as lunch. The cost is $17 per adult and $11.35 per child age 5 to 11. Advance reservations are required (Tel: 415-771-4000). AC Transit, 508 16th Street, Oakland, runs sporadic six-hour trips to the Inglenook Winery and Vintage 1870 (adults $7, children $5) and seven-hour trips to Sterling Vineyard and Hurd Candles (adults $8, children $6); neither includes lunch, but the latter includes the aerial tram fare at Sterling. Call 415-654-7878, ext. 314, between 8 A.M. and 6 P.M. for dates and reservations.

If you go by car, a helpful free "Guide Map to Napa Valley Wines" and wineries is available from the Napa County Development Council, P. O. Box 636, Napa, Calif. 94558. The comprehensive guidebook "California's Wine Wonderland" is available free in San Francisco from the Wine Institute, 165 Post Street, the California State Automobile Association (AAA) at Van Ness and Hayes, or the Wine Museum, 633 Beach Street at Fisherman's Wharf. One of the best small museums anywhere, the Wine Museum, is worth an hour of your time a day or two before any Napa Valley expedition. It is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M.; on Sundays, it opens at noon. It is closed Mondays and major holidays.

Admission is free; no refreshments are served.

The Wine Institute guidebook lists hours with moderate accuracy, but it is safe to assume that any winery will be open between 10 A.M. and 4 P.M., except on major holidays. If one happens to be closed for some reason, another will be open nearby. Of the vineyards visited or mentioned herein, only Buena Vista, Inglenook and Beringer offer picnic facilities and Buena Vista's were by far the most appealing. The picnic ground we used at Vintage 1870 was extremely limited (one table in a parking lot which was empty that Monday), but the complex also has an indoor-outdoor cafe/restaurant. St. Helena has a pleasant municipal park and Napa Valley State Park, near Hanns Kornell, is ideal for picnicking, but costs $1.50 per car ($4 for an overnight campsite). Good Italian food, but occasional slow service, is offered by the Grape Vine Inn between Yountville and Oakville. Faster service is available at Mary's Soup-n-Such, an attractive outdoor garden adjoining Beaulieu Vineyard in Rutherford. In the Freemark Abbey-Hurd Candles complex is a restaurant offering complete meals in the $5.75 to $7.75 range.

If you want to stay overnight in Napa, the Silverado Country Club, to which many wine-growers belong, offers rooms to nonmembers when available. Singles, $30; doubles, $34; Tel. 707-255-2970. Motel 6, at 3380 Solano Avenue one block west at Redwood Road and Highway 29 in Napa, has rooms at $8.95 single, $10.95 double. (707-226-1811). The Wine Country Inn at 11521 Lodi Lane (two miles north of St. Helena) has an attractive setting, vineyard views, balconies, fireplaces and 14 double rooms with alcove beds. Room rates are $33 to $35, including buffet Continental breakfast.

extra dry, which means medium dry, a little sweeter than Brut."

My wife and I took and tasted. We were thrilled.

Our 20-minute tour of the champagne works was conducted by Hanns Kornell's teen-age daughter Paula. She was almost as eloquent as the guide at Christian Brothers had been long ago and far away that morning. "We don't grow our own grapes. Why should we?" Paula asked rhetorically. "Tobacco companies don't grow their own tobacco. Coffee companies don't grow their own beans. My father shops around the vineyards and samples for the best grapes and if there's a bad harvest in one place, he buys from another. He says it's his form of quality control."

What we saw, then, was a family-run enterprise staffed by 12 people. Hanns Kornell Champagne is naturally fermented in the bottle you drink from, and we watched two men give a quarter-turn by hand to the bottles—some 9,000 apiece daily. The even more meticulous stacking procedure—with little rulers supporting pyramids of bottles that look as though they could easily collapse—had us touring on tiptoes, though nobody asked us to.

When we returned to the tasting room, it was closing time, but Hanns Kornell—who'd been repairing a roof—dropped down to check up. A ruddy white-haired man, he reminded me of the late Viennese character actor who played the Little Ole Winemaker in TV commercials. We introduced ourselves in German and he broke open a bottle of bone-dry to lubricate our conversation.

Every now and then, Kornell conducts the winery tour himself. "I see things I don't see when I'm an insider—and I start fixing them as soon as the tour is over. I know where all the bottles are buried. And, listen, I visited the owner of a famous French winery on a Sunday and he offered to show me around. But it turned out he couldn't. Do you know why? Because he couldn't find the light switch in his own cellar."

an "improving" new brand that had crushed its first grape in 1969. Nothing I'd been told prepared me for Sterling's setting: a Moorish castle complex atop a high knoll reached by aerial tramway. The four-seater cable car cost $2.50 per adult (both kids went free). Since Sterling is perhaps the only winery in California that charges admission, visitors to the tasting room at the top are offered discounts ranging from $1.30 to $2 for each bottle they buy.

Locked into our cable car by three uniformed hostesses, the four of us rode through treetops over vineyards, a lake and a fountain to the castle ramparts, where two more hostesses unlocked us and helped us disembark. Somewhere below, mountain bells were tinkling "Mary Had a Little Lamb" or "Merrily We Roll Along." We found ourselves on a self-guided tour through the castle winery that was much nearer and more comprehensive than the one at Buena Vista with which we'd started our day. And our tour on glass-enclosed catwalks overlooking the entire Sterling winemaking operation was much more visual and graphic than our hour with the Christian Brothers.

Sterling was plastered with prose reminiscent of Omar Khayyam. Three paragraphs in a courtyard might tell you what operations you might expect to see at the time of year you visit the Napa Valley.

"Vines awake from winter dormancy in March or early April. Buds bulge and burst to release new shoots and leaves, which grow rapidly for several weeks."

"In May the flowering occurs for 10-14 days. Breezes and bees pollinate the flowers, which then 'set'—forming grape clusters of small green berries. The grapes grow to full size by early August, but then require another 6-8 weeks of sunshine to ripen. Gradually, they become translucent, change color, acquire sweetness, and are ready for harvest—about 100 days after flowering—in September and early October."

In a way then, the liveliest times to visit the wineries are autumn and early winter, when the crushing and fermenting processes in the factories are in full swing. During our summer visit, nature's work in the fields can be glimpsed only in passing, if at all. Yet Sterling is educational and enlightening all year round, and amusing. Our walkways were festooned with quotes from such diverse sources as St. Paul ("Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake") and Martin Luther ("Who loves not women, wine and song/Remains a fool his whole life long"). After visiting the roof deck—a tile terrace with a mountain view that would have struck Scheherazade speechless—and even before boarding the aerial tram back to the parking lot, we experienced the Big Letdown: We tasted the wine.

In the handsome tasting rooms at the summit of Mount Sterling, my wife and I were served the gamut of Sterling Wines by a formidable fraulein who insisted on our finishing each one before enduring the next. We made our getaway after five drinks, of which only the 1975 Cabernet Rose rated so much as "nice."

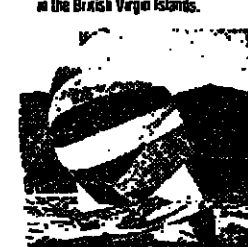

I did manage to gasp out my main complaint: "Miss, there's an awful lot of crud floating around this wine." To which she responded, "Some call it sediment, but we call it tartrates. Connoisseurs favor it."

Heading back toward San Francisco along Route 29, I turned off onto Lark-mead Lane, three miles before St. Helena. It was nearly 4:30 P.M., but I wanted our wine tour to end on an upbeat note of quality and there was a man I wanted to meet. More than a decade ago, traveling first-class by air, I had discovered a first-rate California champagne called Hanns Kornell Brut. It became the only champagne on which I spend my own money in America.

A third-generation wine producer from Mainz who arrived in America in 1940 with $2 in his pocket, Hanns Kornell makes only champagne—which may explain why his tasting room was still thronged as closing time neared. Seeing that the Kornell sales list featured a champagne dryer than Brut (which, in wine parlance, means very dry) called Sehr Trocken (bone dry), I asked to sample it. But the hostess told me: "We only feature one flavor each day, sir. Today it's ports are invariably located out in the countryside. Stay out there. I like to arrive at my first overnight stop by lunchtime, which means a maximum drive of about 100 miles from the airport. The excitement of being abroad and on unfamiliar terrain always keeps me fully alert that first morning despite a previous night of brief and fitful sleep, but drowsiness begins to take over by midday, and I'm glad then to park the car and settle into a comfortable hotel.

Sampling the Ups and Downs Of a Fly-Drive Tour in Spain

It's a good idea to reserve a room for the first night in advance—not that you really need to, but there's peace of mind in knowing that you're expected. Beyond the first night, I usually don't bother with reservations. In the off-season months I've invariably found a room with bath in exactly the hotel of my choice. What's more I relish the adventure of looking over a town and its hotels before deciding where to bed down for the night. There are times, though, when an advance reservation is advisable even at the nadir of the tourist season. If I were going to Granada, for instance, I'd want to make certain of having a reservation at the Parador de San Francisco, which overlooks the Alhambra gardens and has only 26 rooms. And I don't think I'd trust to luck for last-minute accommodations at the 20-room Colombe d'Or in St-Paul-de-Vence or the 24-room La Badia in Orvieto.

Assuming you're on a one-week fly-drive, you'll have five days of motoring and sightseeing in between your first night's stop and your last night back in the gateway city. In planning your itinerary, you'll probably want to follow a circular route so as to eliminate any backtracking. (Some fly-drives, however, allow the driver to pick up a car at one airport and leave it at another—Paris-Nice, for example, or Milan-Rome.) Don't attempt to cover too much territory. About 125 to 150 miles a day is plenty. A good rule of thumb is to figure on averaging 30 to 35 miles per hour, unless you're barreling down a four-lane superhighway—and who wants to be on one of those for long?

If your hotel for the last night is in the center of a big city like Paris or Rome, you may have some not unreasonable trepidations about driving up to its front door. Traffic in these cities isn't nearly as hellish as nervous Nellies would have you believe, but the maze of one-way streets may make you feel like a laboratory rat undergoing some fiendish psychological experiment; and when you do finally find your way to the hotel and unload the baggage, there remains the challenge of finding a place to park. First-time fly-drivers should probably plan to turn in the car before checking into the hotel. If the airport is on or near your route into town, return the car to the rental agency there and take a taxi to your hotel. Otherwise, turn it in at one of the agency's stations in town. You'll get a brochure listing their addresses at the time you pick up the car; one is certain to be situated near the outskirts, and hence easy to reach.

So much for general principles. Now let me describe how they worked out in practice on our most recent fly-drive.

Our sights were set on Seville and Córdoba. (We had visited Granada on a previous trip.) At 9 o'clock on a balmy, cloudless October morning, our overnight Trans World Airlines jet from New York touched down at Málaga Airport. Forty minutes later we cent—rocky escarpments and steep ravines, lush vales in the riverbeds below, an occasional white-walled hill town, and everywhere the contrastingly hued greens of olive and pine trees set against a pellucid sky.

We reached the hotel just three hours after leaving Málaga. Our welcome (if that is the word) from an unsmiling and uncommunicative woman at the front desk was hardly delicious, but she did put us in a pleasant room just two doors down the hall from one occupied by the poet Rainer Maria Rilke when he stayed at the

we were ready to drive off in our Seat (Spanish Fiat) 124, a well-powered, four-door sedan belonging to the Group C category.

A short feeder road leads from the airport to the four-lane highway that runs west from Málaga to Torremolinos and points down the coast. We stayed on this busy highway for all of three minutes, then made a right turn onto a small provincial road that branches off in a northerly direction toward Cádiz. Immediately the traffic disappeared, olive groves took the place of billboards and black-garbed women trudged along the roadside leading burros laden with farm produce. Instant Spain! Soon we came to our first Andalusian village—all white walls and tiled roofs—and caught glimpses of plant-filled patios as we passed an occasional open door.

I had decided to spend the night at Ronda and had reserved a room at the Reina Victoria, a hotel recommended by Michelin for its view. The Reina Victoria also boasted two Michelin symbols that I always find particularly desirable: a rocking chair (denoting quiet) and a P (which indicates that the hotel has its own car park). Ronda is about 60 miles northwest of Málaga—ordinarily an easy two-hour drive, according to my rule of thumb, except that this was no ordinary road. Málaga is situated at sea level while Ronda lies on a plateau 2,300 feet high, and the road linking them turns and winds through a long series of mountain passes. The scenery was magnifi-

Reina Victoria in the early 1920's. The view from our balcony was everything Michelin promised—a palm-filled garden immediately below, and just beyond that a spectacular valley and mountain range.

An excellent lunch of gazpacho, roast pork and melon in the hotel dining room fortified us for a walk into town. We wandered through the narrow, cobbled alleys of the old enclave, a Moorish stronghold until 1485, and visited one of Spain's earliest buildings, dating from the 13th century. Then it was time for a much-needed nap, followed by a late dinner at the hotel and a good night's sleep. Incidentally, our bill at the Reina Victoria (including room, breakfasts, lunches, dinners, and wine) came to $37.50—total, not per person.

Next morning we set off for Seville, 75 miles away. Again the road passed between high slopes covered with olive and almond trees, but now we were descending into the Guadalquivir Valley, and in time the hills gave way to wide expanses of cotton fields on either side of the road. Vehicles with Seville license plates began to fill the highway, and soon we were driving down the handsome, palm-lined Avenida de la Victoria that leads into the center of town. Friends had already warned us that Seville's grand old hotel, the Alfonso XIII, was closed for renovations, so we settled instead on the Dofa Maria, located just a few steps away from the cathedral and within soothing earshot—we were soon to learn—of the Giralda bells. Alas, the hotel had no parking and no garage. The concierge advised me to leave the car in the square adjoining the cathedral, which I did with some misgivings that turned out to be entirely justified.

For two days we soaked up the sounds, scents and sights of Seville. The clanging of bells on Sunday morning summoned us to high mass at the ornate cathedral—Europe's third largest church, after St. Peter's in Rome and St. Paul's in London. From there it was just a few steps to the Alcázar, a vast edifice from the 14th century with lavishly embellished Moorish courtyards and a formal garden so extensive that we lost our way for a while amid its fountains, reflecting pools and fragrant alleys of boxwood. For most of our stay in Seville, however, we just wandered—along the pedestrianized shopping street called of the deal. If not, you can get it for a small additional payment. Mine cost about $16.

No motoring trip through Spain would be complete without a stopover at one of the many government-operated paradors that are now to be found throughout the country. A new parador had opened only a few months before in Carmona, on the road to Córdoba, and we decided to give it a look en route. Leaving the main highway about 30 miles out of Seville, we turned into the town center and followed signs pointing in the direction of the parador. They took us up steep winding streets and past imposing red brick churches until suddenly we thronged with devout Muslims of gawking tourists. But what is most lovingly in our memory of Carmona is the delight of glimpsing the filled patios behind wrought-iron grilles and catching the chipmunk-like chirps from overhead windows wandered through the twisting of the Jueria.

Our tentative itinerary had for two days in Córdoba, but one day we had seen enough; and the weather continued to be warm, we concluded that some bathing on the Mediterranean not be amiss. The road to the the Sierpes, past the old tobacco factory (now the university) from which Carmen emerges to sing the "Habanera" in Bizet's "Carmen," and through the narrow, jasmine-scented streets of the Barrio Santa Cruz.

We left Seville with the pleasant feeling of wanting to return another time. We also left with a dented fender. Our car, exposed for two days to the incessant comings and goings in the cathedral square, had been the victim of an inexperienced driver, who had hit and then run. Though the damage was minor, it was enough to make me thankful that I had arranged for a full "collision damage waiver" when signing up for the car at Málaga Airport. Many fly-drive packages include unlimited collision insurance as part on a fly-drive trip to Europe, try to book a package tour in advance and you'll save money. Our basic fly-drive package added up to $330 per person, as follows:

GIT fare (October), New York-Málaga round trip, $426.
Tax, $3.
Land arrangements (Type C car, hotel (1) night), $101.

We spent approximately $30 for gas. Hotels (four-star category, throughout), meals and extras averaged out at about $50 a day (for two). Thus, our total cost—basic package plus additional expenses in Spain—came to about $700 per person.—R.G.

rounded a bend and saw at the very summit of the town the crumbling walls of an ancient fortress. Behind them stood the new Parador Rey Don Pedro I. We parked in its large, stone-paved courtyard, took one look at the dazzling view below and resolved to stay the night.

I'm told that it's risky to show up at a parador without reservations, but there were plenty of available rooms at the Don Pedro I, and we got a choice one facing south over a shimmering expanse of verdant fields. After a leisurely lunch in a dining room that was more like the nave of a cathedral than a hotel restaurant, we set out to explore the town. But the imposing churches were all locked, as is often the case in Latin countries after midday, and the Roman necropolis just out of town displayed a "closed for cleaning" sign at the entrance. So we found ourselves a shaded bench on the Plaza San Fernando, a spacious square lined with 17th and 18th-century buildings, and spent a tranquil hour there watching Carmona's dogs, cats, children and grown-ups milling about in their quotidian routine. Returning to the parador in the late afternoon, we stopped at a bar for some bottled orange juice and saw the opening act of a bullfight—on TV.

Next morning we set off for Córdoba, a two-hour drive away. Having had one fender dented in Seville, we determined not to put the other one at risk, so instead of picking a hotel in Córdoba's Jueria, the ancient ghetto quarter with its jumble of narrow streets, we opted for the Melia Córdoba; it had ample parking space, just as the Michelin guide promised. Córdoba's mammoth mosque, with its forest of pillars and Moorish arches, was a 10-minute stroll away, and we spent an enchanted hour prowling about in the dim light and imagining the place ran through a hilly landscape of yards and olive groves, the stretching of green-tufted cypress.

We avoided the worst of the in Málaga by taking the cut-off remolinos and soon were a lunch in an outdoor restaurant beach at La Carlhueta. It was drive from there to Marbella, we reaped the rewards of off travel by finding a last-minute at the usually booked-to-capacity Fuerte, a vintage hotel by Co. Sol standards, set in a quiet. That evening, in the company Marbella-based friend, we had perb dinner of seafood soup, sole, salad, wine and coffee in taurant at Puerto Banus. Tot for three: $14.

Our fly-drive package included accommodations for one night Hotel Riviera in Benalmádena just outside Torremolinos, and leaving, I had arranged to take the last night. Any apprehen might have entertained about presenting a fly-drive voucher quickly laid to rest when I assigned, directly facing the balcony room to which we had on a high floor. But then, in a hotel of 190 rooms the at most 20 guests that day.

Our final morning in Spain with breakfast on the balcony watched the 747 that would back to New York fly in over the tereanean. Then we loaded the last time, stopped to fill tank and drove to the airport 15 minutes down the main Málaga. Soon we were taxi the runway where we had lan seven days before. It seemed time ago. During the flight New York, we pulled out m guidebooks and began plotting next fly-drive.

4 reasons why now is the time to see South America

Of course, we could easily give you hundreds. Reasons like the excitement of our picturesque cities, or the quiet mystery of ancient Incan temples. Or the abundance of stunning natural scenery. Or the golf courses, casinos and nightclubs that keep you busy when you're not sunning on a beach, shopping for bargains or just plain sightseeing.

Or we could remind you that in South America, this is the season. While the Northern hemisphere bundles up for winter, cosmopolitan Buenos Aires swings into spring and summer. Rio steps out for Carnival. And delicious Caracas lazes beside the warm Caribbean. But that still might not convince you, because South America is thought by some to be too big and too expensive for people with strict vacation schedules and average budgets. At Aerolíneas Argentinas, convenient, inexpensive travel is our business. Here's proof.

Reason #1: PARANA RIVER CRUISE 15 days, 14 nights. This is one South American river cruise that doesn't ask you to rough it. You'll arrive in Rio for a 3 day stopover. Fly on to Iguaçu Falls, and continue to Asunción, Paraguay. Then you'll cruise in style on our luxurious river boat from Asunción to Buenos Aires. Or opt for the slightly longer version (17 days), and wind up your visit in Lima, Peru.

Reason #2: TROUT FISHING IN ARGENTINA 12 days, 11 nights. The greatest fishing in the world? Just maybe. Angle for big rainbows and browns in a setting of exceptional beauty and tranquility. Spend a day in Buenos Aires, then it's off to Bariloche and San Martín, with their plentiful Andean lakes and streams. Or stay 17 days and sample Esquel, where the choice is varied and exciting.

Reason #3: PERU/ BOLIVIA/ BRAZIL/ ARGENTINA 16 days, 15

nights. If there were a "best of South America," this would be it. Start with a journey to the land of the ancient Incas, then cross Lake Titicaca to La Paz, Bolivia. Unwind on a Rio beach (when not jewelry shopping and sightseeing), and finish up in delightful cosmopolitan Buenos Aires.

Reason #4: RIO/BUENOS AIRES 15 days, 14 nights. For purists, a package that lets you concentrate on two of South America's premier cities. You'll find the combination of sun and style invigorating! Includes hotel of your choice, a half day sightseeing tour in each city, and daily Brazilian breakfast in Rio.

Interested? Clip the coupon below, or ask your travel agent for more information on these and many other packages we offer to South America. And remember, you'll be flying Aerolíneas Argentinas—the airline that makes you feel at home in South America even before you get there.

Wales: Lady Larks and Choral Mechanics

Wales, from Snowdonia to the Black Mountains and Brecon Beacons—natural ornament, bountiful source of mineral wealth, historic fortress.

During my stay at the farm I twice mounted Jane, a placid, shaggy-ankled cobb, and with three or four others even less experienced than I (Camp Sewanhaka 1928), led by two cheerful, ponchoed girl guides riding bareback, "trekked" for two-hour periods high above the roadside woods, past interminable tall stone walls, bedraggled rusty bracken (fern), gorse (squat, yellow-flowered, prickly shrub) and heather—to the top of the world. Cold rain slithering off a city raincoat down my pantlegs into unsuitable shoes failed to extinguish my excitement at bird's-eye views to the sea, and one glimpse of the giant crag of Cader Idris plowing through the mist.

Then there was the late afternoon when I accompanied on foot a hurried, though not uncommunicative, brook through an autumn-tipped grove to the estuary, where three white gulls hovered, imprisoned in a double rain-bow.

The sun broke open the sky for Friday Market Day in Dolgellau. Mr. Jones drove me to town to see how his sheep were faring at auction, permitting me a splendid opportunity to assess these doughty mountain people who have spent centuries giving the Romans and Anglo-Saxons a hard time. The crowd gathered around a grid of small, closely packed sheep pens was preponderantly male, heavily booted, soberly dressed except for a few tweedy sports. Several modified Sherlock Holmes hats bobbed about in a sea of checkered caps. Generally of medium stature, the men had about them a lean, ruddy look, strong noses refined by thoroughbred nostrils. All seemed totally sheep-directed, smoking thoughtfully, pinching deep into the wool.

Dolgellau, should you ask, is pronounced Dolgethly with the tip of the tongue against the roof of the mouth and a bubble in the cheek. It is a ponderous, gray stone town of winding streets, neat row houses and tempting craft shops. I did not buy pottery, tapestry-weave woolens or a carved wooden Love Spoon, having reached the ultimate weightlessness of travel wisdom. Instead, I took in a bit of rugged in the rain before knocking off for tea at the Golden Lion Royal Hotel. The sun burst through the leaded panes of the lounge, momentarily to burnish the excessive copper and brass and make translucent the Demerara sugar crystals trembling on my tea-spoon.

Monday I bused to Barmouth, Fairbourne's "twin city" at the mouth of the estuary, hopped the coastal train north, and within the hour had entered heavy cattle country. I had purchased a Coachmaster Ticket in London—good for unlimited express coach travel throughout the British Isles (an eight-day ticket is $29 for adults, and $19 for children; it's expected to go up next year). But it did not serve me as well there as the seven-day local North and Mid-Wales bus/train Ride-about Ticket or the Southwest Wales Runabout Ticket, which each cost around $8. Not only is national coach service restricted beginning October, but at best it does not reach into all the villages that might be tempting to a leisurely tourist.

Mr. Lewis, the train guard (conductor), approved my choice of Cricketh on the Lleyn Peninsula as headquarters for North Wales. He directed me to a hotel there, where his cousin worked, with a fine view of the castle.

Of Edward I's string of 13th-century castles, Caernarvon, where Prince Charles was invested Prince of Wales in 1969, is the most impressive, and best preserved. My heart, however, lies in Harlech, as I prefer rocks and more than a little ruin in my castles. Alone atop a turret I dominated instantly all the mountains of Snowdonia and Tremadoc Bay. When not reviewing castles, I made forays to the early-Victorian underground slate quarries of Blaenau-Ffestiniog, hill-encircled Lake Bala, mysterious in the rain, and Llandudno, north coast spa situated between dramatic headlands, its battery of hotels and rooming houses gazing bleakly at the gulls.

It was my good fortune one Wednesday to be a passenger aboard the round-trip shopping excursion bus from Cricketh to Llandudno, which nets mainly the female and elderly. Between the valley villages of Bettws-y-Coed (pronounced Bettosacoyd) and Capel Curig the rear seats of the bus burst into song. Several lady larks, who I think may have spent more hours in a Lion or Dragon than in the British Home Stores, relieved the mountain splendor with melody.

Not until Machynlleth, however, to which region I returned for the weekend, was informal song as a national urge and pastime confirmed. Unsuccessful in locating a Bed and Breakfast, I resigned myself to the comfort of the Wynnistay Hotel ($14 with bath and breakfast). It stands upstreet from the clocktower, and downstreet from the house where Owain Glyndwr summoned his first parliament to proclaim himself Prince of Wales in 1404.

In the hotel taproom, after dinner, a crowd of mostly middle-aged couples sat pressed together on the banquettes soberly drinking pints of bitter, or gin-and-orange. I asked the woman next to me in which local church I might hear fine Welsh choral singing on Sunday. She did not have a ready answer, but as her party got up to leave, she shyly suggested I join her and her husband across the street at the Red Lion in half an hour.

Guided by sounds of unmistakable good cheer, I crossed the black, empty main street and entered a simple establishment, to be greeted by Mr. Humphreys (Alf), who took my coat and order, then introduced me around the small wooden table. Mrs. Humphreys (Margaret) explained in a whisper that it was "just a workman's pub." Suddenly from another table a big, homely, ginger-haired fellow with thick glasses, a gap in his front teeth and lots of gold in the back, queried in a rich baritone who killed Cock Robin. Several sparrows professed their guilt, and there I was at last in "Wales, Land of Song."

The self-consciousness that hung in the air at my entrance soon dissipated. The American woman's unqualified appreciation, abetted by Alf's generosity as host, combined with the customers' unqualified Welsh delight in harmony and the sound of their own voices to make for a super Saturday night. "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" I acknowledged with a smile, then proceeded lustily to reinforce their singing of "The Old Rugged Cross." After the spirited national anthem, "Land of My Fathers" (in Welsh, naturally), Ginger rendered with tabernacle a beautiful "Mandolins in the Moonlight," succeeded by a solo which required a pantomime of peeing into his mug—both well received. When Margaret picked me up the following afternoon to attend the children's Harvest Festival at her church, I was still wishing I hadn't stayed till closing time.

My formal religious record is spotty. In Wales, religion ranks with Rugby, Spirituous Revelry and Song as a consuming preoccupation (I believe some include Women)—each Welshman to his own order of priority. I toured ancient churches, browsing in their graveyards among lichen-buried headstones of the families Evans, Jones, Griffiths, Morris, Davies—and a few others. I lurked in church vestibules on Sunday just long enough to be disappointed at the choral thinness inside. The Anglican church in Machynlleth was another matter.

The sparse congregation consisted mainly of mothers, grannies and tots with tightly clutched bouquets or harvest baskets to deposit on cue at the altar. Men home glued to the telly? The older children condescended a throat-constricting service of songs and recitation. It was hard to believe that similar souls fueled the little hellions. I had seen setting off fire crackers in a ruined doorway at Aberystwyth Castle during a sightseeing excursion the day before.

After a bus trip down the heavily forested Wye Valley to Llandrindod Wells, I boarded the train for Swansea, on the southern coast, and rounded out my religious experience while entertaining a Baptist minister at lunch. A tall, fiftyish fellow in black got on the train at one of the early local stops and sat down across the way. After stalling his satchel and umbrella, he gave me a subliminal smile, clapped his thin knees together, leaned against the window and closed his eyes. I returned my inattention to "Castles and Historic Places in Wales" briefly before taking another peek.

He was the plainest man I'd ever seen: pallid, polished skin stretched tautly, unaccepted by shadow or color, over the bones of his skull from very high forehead to clerical collar. Hungry, I positioned the retractable seat table and laid upon it my trusty jars of peanut butter and strawberry jam, along with two crusty bakery "baps." I had finished one bun when I became aware of stirrings over the way. "Would you care for some bread and jam?" I asked.

He smiled fully, hopped over sideways like a hungry bluejay and settled in opposite me. He asked if I would prepare it for him as his five sisters had not raised him to be practical. Lifting his heels, he made a narrow lap and placed his long hands, palms up, upon it. I presented to him two rosy dripping halves on a piece of Kleenex. He ate and talked with enthusiasm, spattering crumbs over the upholstery—like a bluejay taking a bath—and a fine mist over my cheek.

When we neared his station he rose, thanked me, asked if his hair, "what there is of it," was mussed, shook my hand and said he could hardly wait to tell his wife about his experience. He gathered his things and departed. As the train started to move, my attention was seized by sharp tapping on the window opposite. His plain face alight, he looked every inch the preacher, in complete command of the furred umbrella. I cannot think of him as a closer of pubs on Sunday.

In Swansea the intricacies of plotting public transportation for side trips with only a week left of vacation made me cry Uncle. I screwed up my courage, rented a car and curb-hopped on the left side of the road out past The Mumbles lighthouse, in and out of the cozy bay resorts, up and down the spectacular green headlands of the Gower Peninsula. Lovely in the fall, it must be a delightful summer vacation spot with the sailboats out in force. Two days slaloming across the center line about Black Mountain and Brecon Beacons National Park whetted my appetite for a more leisurely penny trekking visit someday.

On a Black Mountain byway I caught the moon performance of an entrancing, obscure one-act play. Set: Background of naked russet mountains, softly pleated by erosion; foreground of steep hillside rising from narrow valley. Cast: Old man, young man, two black-and-white dogs, sheep. Sound effects: Whistles, occasional shouts, roadside rill, silence. Action: Random walking of men, running and lying down of dogs, separating and reforming blocks of sheep.

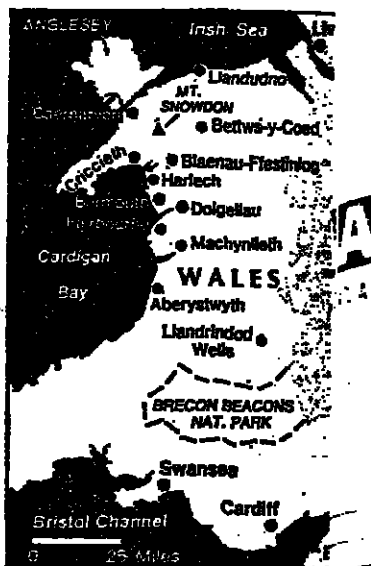

I sat on the "bonnet" of my orange Cortina for half an hour in the warm sunshine munching Ry-Vitas spread with peanut butter, watching. One car passed. We waved. The young man walked away over the hill with some sheep. The old man returned to his parked truck. I asked with a smile if he were training the dogs for show. "No," he replied with a scowl, "my son-in-law got his flock mixed up mine."

Back to letting them do the dr. I pushed on east to Cardiff, a city I can take or leave alone. I not been swept since the tin. Owain Glyndwr, I am sure. A history-crammed castle with exciting stone animals escaping over walls of the outer ward and, distant, the reconstructed old farage of St. Fagan's Folk Museum well wrapped it up for me.

But, thanks to the Wales Tour Board, I tracked down at last a voice male choir. On my final ev in Wales a double-decker com bus set me down in Treorchy af hour-and-a-half's mole's trip is dark through the "storied, coe Rhondda Valley." A seasoned v woman by then, I had several p gers leaning into my conversatio the conductor to help locate the School on Glyncoll Road. Upon a he handed me over to the bus h tor who led the way to a bar where the choir's Tuesday practic sions take place. A choir membe comed me and rushed off to i chair.

At 7:30 sharp the men materi as spontaneously as fruit flies to a robust semicircle before John Jones. He proceeded to coax and beat his good-natured, earnest correcting a sibilant here, a drag

Though fragmented and repetit sound embodied angels; the res a fascinating workshop in chor chanics, climaxed by the direct nouncement: "A lady has come way from America to hear us sing for her 'All Hallow Night'?"

A father delegated his son to me back to Cardiff, ostensibly catch up with the bus. During tially nervous, heavy-on-the-ped and over a stout at my hotel, I with the young man the pain impending divorce—as well a gods' on underneath that gr crab formation on the rugby fir squirrel-brown eyes glistened as counted his singing group's tri disasters and brushes with the during television appearances. Fitzgerald liked our interpreta the Negro spiritual." Zero Moste Julie Andrews that. Above all, pressed me with the intense b hood of the Treorchy Choir. Ha refused to autograph the group graph in my complimentary be because "None of us is im alone."

Fall is not the time to seek sional guidance for well-oiled in Wales. Not a single Welsh stood in my way, however, a sun-shone more often than not. anyone desire a small, beautiful pally all to himself in autumn put him next to one.

The airline that flies to more of the world also flies to more of Europe.

Pan Am flies direct to more cities in the world from the U.S. than any other airline.

And since Europe is a large part of the world, we also fly to more of its cities than any other U.S. airline.

And all our flights to Europe leave from Pan Am's Worldport™ terminal at JFK.

We leave for London every day at 10:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. On 747s.

We leave for Frankfurt every day at 6:00 p.m., 7:00 p.m., and 7:45 p.m. On 747s.

We leave for Rome every day at 8:15 p.m.* On a 747. For Munich every day at 6:00 p.m. On a 747.

And for Brussels, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, and the rest of Europe we leave several times a week.

On many of our 747s we offer first class passengers a chance to dine in our upper-deck dining room. At a table like you would in a fine restaurant. And like in a fine restaurant, we ask that you make a reservation. (You can make it when you make your flight reservation.)

And we have a lot of fares to choose from.

Besides first class and regular economy fares, we offer 14/21-day fares, 22/45-day fares, and 22/45-day Budget Fares.

Budget Fares can save you about 50% over regular round trip economy fares.
 (Because these fares are so low, there are various restrictions and conditions which your travel agent can explain more easily than we can here.)

The result of all those fares? Well, if you're vacationing on a tight budget we can help loosen your belt a little.
